 LOOP. n. f. [herd, Dutch; from loordant, French; loordant, Erse; a heavy, stupid, or witless fellow. D. Trevous derives loordant from lorde or lorde, a village in Gascony, the inhabitants of which were formerly noted robbers, say they. But dexterity in robbing implies some degree of subtilty, from which the Gascons are so far removed, that, at this day, they are awkward and heavy to a proverb. The Erse imports some degree of knavery, but then it is used in a ludicrous sense, as in English, you pretty rogue; though in general it denotes reproachful heaviness, or stupid laziness. Spenser's Scholiast says, loord was wont, among the old Britons, to signify a lord; and therefore the Danes, that usurped their tyranny here in Britain, were called, for more dread than dignity, loordans, i. e. lord Danes, whose insolence and pride was so outrageous in this realm, that if it fortune'd a Briton to be going over a bridge, and saw the Dane set foot upon the same, he must return back till the Dane was clean over, else he must abide no less than present death: but being afterward expelled, the name of loordans became so odious unto the people whom they had long oppress'd, that, even at this day, they use for more reproach to call the quartern ague the fever loordane. So far the Scholiast, but erroneously. From Spenser's own words, it signifies something of stupid dulness rather than magisterial arrogance. Macbean.] A drone.
 Siker, thou'st but a lazy loord,
 And rekes much of thy fwinke,
 That with fond terms and witless words

 That thrown again upon the coast,
 I may once more repeat my pain.
Prior.
14. Remiss; not attentive.
 To break loose. To gain liberty.
 If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination which keeps us from chusing the worse, be liberty, madmen and fools are only the free-men.
Locke.
15. To break loose. To gain liberty.
 Like two black forms on either hand,
 Our Spanish army and the Indians stand;
 This only space betwixt the clouds is clear,
 Where you, like day, broke loose from both appear. Dryd.
 To let loose. To let at liberty; to let at large; to free from any restraint.
 And let the living bird loose into the open field. Lev. xiv. 7.
 We ourselves make our fortunes good or bad; and when God lets loose a tyrant upon us, or a sickness, if we fear to die, or know not to be patient, the calamity fits heavy upon us.
Taylor's holy Living.
 In addition and division, either of space or duration, it is the number of its repeated additions or divisions that alone remains distinct, as will appear to any one who will let his thoughts loose in the vast expanse of space, or divisibility of matter.
Locke.

LOR

If one way of improvement cannot be made a recreation, they must be let loose to the childish play they fancy; which they should be weaned from, by being made fust of it.
Locke on Education.

1. Liberty; freedom from restraint.
 Come, and forsake thy cloying store,
 And all the busy pageantry
 That wife men scorn, and fools adore:
 Come, give thy soul a loose, and taste the pleasures of the poor.
Dryden's Horace.

LOR

3. A tyrant; an oppressive ruler.
 Now being assembled into one company, rather without a lord than at liberty to accomplish their misery, they fall to division.
Hayward.

'Tis death to fight, but kingly to controul
 Lord-like at ease, with arbitrary pow'r,
 To peel the chiefs, the people to devour.
Dryden.

4. A husband.
 I sit in bitterness of soul deplor'd
 My absent daughter, and my dearer lord. Pope's Odyssey.
 One who is at the head of any business; an overruler.
 Grant harvest lord more by a penny or two.
 To call on his fellows the better to doo. Tupper's Husb.
5. A nobleman.
 Thou art a lord, and nothing but a lord. Shakespeare.
6. A general name for a peer of England.
 Not were the crimes objected against him so clear, as to give convincing satisfaction to the major part of both houses, especially that of the lords.
King Charles.
7. An honorary title applied to offices; as, lord chief justice, lord mayor, and lord chief baron.
 To lord, v. n. To domineer; to rule despotically.
 Unrighteous lord of love! what law is this,
 That me thou makest thus tormented be?
 The whiles the lordeth in licentious bliss
 Of her free will, scorn both thee and me. Spenser.
 I see them lordeth in London streets. Shakespeare.
 Those huge tracts of ground they lorded over begat wealth, wealth uttered in pride. Hovell's Vocal Forest.
 They had by this posses'd the tow'rs of Gath,
 And lorded over them whom now they serve. Milton's Ag.
 I should choose rather to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our lord, than by a denial of truths, through blood and perjury, wade to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne.
 But if thy passions lord it in thy breast,

For you my bowl shall flow, my rocks shall bleed;
Judge and assert my right, impartial Jove. Pope's Odyssey.

When men are openly abandoned, and lost to all shame, they have no reason to think it hard, if their memory be reproached. Swift.

6. To bewilder.

I will go lose myself,
And wander up and down to view the city. Shakespeare.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

When the mind pursues the idea of infinity, it uses the ideas and repetitions of numbers, which are so many distinct ideas, kept best by number from running into a confused heap, wherein the mind loses itself. Locke.

7. To deprive of.

How should you go about to lose him a wife he loves with so much passion. Temple.

LOT

8. To kill; to destroy.

9. To throw away; to employ ineffectually.

He has merit, good nature, and integrity, that are too often lost upon great men, or at least are not all three a match for flattery. Pope's Letters.

10. To miss; to part with, so as not to recover.

These sharp encounters, where always many more men are lost than are killed or taken prisoners, put such a stop to Middleton's march, that he was glad to retire. Clarendon.

To LOSE, v. n.

worthless fellow. A word now obsolete.

Such losers and scatterlings cannot easily, by any sheriff, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact. Spenser.

A loser wand'ring by the way,
One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did assay

His biter breast. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
And losers lifted high, where I did look,
I mean to turn the next leaf of the book. Hubbard's Tale.

Be not with work of losers wit defamed,
Ne let such verses poetry be named. Hubbard's Tale.

By Cambridge a towne I do know,
Whose losses by losers doth thew
More here than is needful to tell. Tusser's Husbandry.

A grofs hag!
And, losers, thou art worthy to be dam'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

LO'SER, n. f. [from lose.] One that is deprived of any thing;
one that forfeits any thing; one that is impaired in his possession or hope; the contrary to winner or gainer.

With the loser let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win. Shakespeare.

No man can be provident of his time that is not prudent in the choice of his company; and if one of the speakers be vain, tedious, and trifling, he that hears, and he that answers, are equal losers of their time. Taylor's holy Living.

Losers and malcontents, whose portion and inheritance is a freedom to speak. South's Sermons.

It cannot last, because that act seems to have been carried on rather by the interest of particular countries, than by that of the whole, which must be a loser by it. Temple.

A bull with gilded horns,
Shall be the portion of the conquering chief,
A sword and helm shall cheer the loser's grief. Dryden.

Loss, n. f. [from lose.]

gins him; and a foolish daughter is born to his loss. Ecclesi.

The statement of price of any of the landholder's commodities, lessens his income, and is a clear loss. Locke.

2. Miss.

If he were dead, what would betide of me?
—No other harm but loss of such a lord. Shakespeare.

—The loss of such a lord includes all harms,
Promotes, degrades, delights in strife,
And makes a loss of life. Dryden's Horace.

LO'VE, n. f. [lovisium, Latin.]

The lobes of the loves leaves are cut about their borders like those of parsley; the flower consists, for the most part, of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose; each of these flowers are succeeded by two oblong, gibbous, furrowed seeds, which on one side have a leafy border. This plant is often used in medicine. Miller.

LOUD, adj.

1. Noisy; striking the ear with great force.

Contenting on the Lesbian shore,
His prowess Philomelides confest'd,
And loud acclaiming Greeks the victor blest'd. Pope.

The numbers lost and clear,
Gently steal upon the ear;
Now louder, and yet louder rise,
And fill with spreading sounds the skies. Pope's St. Cecilia.

2. Clamorous; turbulent.

She is loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house.
Prev. vii. 11.

The soldier that philosopher well blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd. Denham.

2. Clamorously.

I read above fifty pamphlets, written by as many presbyterian divines, loudly disclaiming toleration. Swift.

LO'UDNESS, n. f. Noise; force of sound; turbulence; vehemence or fierceness of clamour.

Had any disaster made room for grief, it would have moved according to prudence, and the proportions of the provocation: it would not have fallen out into complaint or loudness. South's Sermons.

To LOVE, v. a. [lozan, Saxon.]

1. To regard with passionate affection, as that of one sex to the other.

LOV

Who is an heir of many hundred sheep,
Doth beauty keep which never fun can burn, Siding, b. i.
Nor storms do turn.

Our own lot is best; and by aiming at what we have not,
we lose what we have already. L'Estrange's Fables.

Prepar'd I stand; he was but born to try
The lot of man, to suffer and to die. Pope's Odyssey.

2. A die, or any thing used in determining chances.

Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scape-goat. Lev. xvi. 8.

Their tasks in equal portions the divides,
And where unequal, there by lots decides. Dryden's Virg.

Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots, to shew, that he would not voluntarily expose them to so imminent danger.

Notes on the Odyssey.

3. It seems in Shakespeare to signify a lucky or wished chance.

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks.

My name hath touch'd your ears; it is Menenius. Shakespeare.

4. A portion; a parcel of goods as being drawn by lot: as, what lot of silks had you at the sale?

5. Proportion of taxes: as, to my lot and lot.

LOTE, tree or nut tree. n. f. [Lotus.] See LOTOS.

The leaves of the lote tree are like those of the nettle; the flowers consist of five leaves, expanded in form of a rose; containing many short flamina in the bottom: the fruit, which is a roundish berry, grows single in the bottom of its leaves.

The fruit of this tree is not so tempting to us, as it was to the companions of Ulysses: the wood is durable, and used to make pipes for wind instruments: the root is proper for hafts of knives, and was highly esteemed by the Romans for its beauty and use. Miller.

LOTOS, n. f. [Lotus.] See LOTUS.

The trees around them all their food produce,
Lotus, the name divine, nectareous juice. Pope's Odyssey.

LOTION, n. f. [lotio, Latin; lotion, French.]

A lotion is a form of medicine compounded of aqueous liquids, used to wash any part with; from lavo, to wash.

In lotion in women's cases, he orders two potions of hellebore macerated in two cytolys of water. Arbutnot on Cases.

LO'TTERY, n. f. [lotterie, Fr. from lot.] A game of chance; a sortilege; distribution of prizes by chance; a play in which lots are drawn for prizes.

Let high-lighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The lottery that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead, will never be chosen by any but whom you shall rightly love. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Every warrior may be said to be a lottery for their work.

South's Sermons.

Fortune, that with malicious joy
Does man, her slave, oppress, Still various and unconstant still,
Promotes, degrades, delights in strife,
And makes a lottery of life. Dryden's Horace.

LO'VE, n. f. [lovisium, Latin.]

The lobes of the loves leaves are cut about their borders

To LOVE, v. a. [lozan, Saxon.]

1. To regard with passionate affection, as that of one sex to the other.

LOV

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.
—It is to be made all of sighs and tears;
It is to be made all of faith and service;
It is to be all made of faithfulness;
All made of passion, and all made of wilfulness;
All adoration, duty, and obedience;
All humbleness, all patience, all impatience,
All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakespeare. As you like it.

I could not love I'm sure
One who in love were wife. Cowley.

The jealous man wishes himself a kind of deity to the person he loves; he would be the only employment of her thoughts. Addison's Spectator, N. 170.

2. To regard with the affection of a friend.

None but his brethren he, and sisters, knew;
Whom the kind youth prefer'd to me;
And much above myself I lov'd them too. Cowley.

Hearken to the birds love-learned song;
The dewie leaves among! Spenser's Epithalam.

While idly I stood looking on;
I found th' effect of love in idleness. Shakespeare.

My tales of love were wont to weary you;
I know you joy not in a love discourse. Shakespeare.

What! have I 'scaped love letters in the holiday-time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Shakespeare.

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye,
Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shakespeare.

What need a vermil-tinctur'd lip for that,
Love-daring eyes, or tresses like the morn. Milton.

Love quarrels oft in pleasing concord end,
Not wedlock treachery, ending ring life. Milton's Agon.

Love potion works more by the strength of charm than nature. Collier on Popularity.

You know y'are in my pow'r by making love. Dryden.

Let mutual joys our mutual trust combine;
And love, and love-born confidence be thine. Pope.

2. Kindness; good-will; friendship.

Death grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st,
And kiss me as thy wife; misery's love,
O come to me! Shakespeare's King John.

What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?
My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;
That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants. Shakespeare.

God brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince. Dem. i. 9.

The one preach Christ of contention, but the other of love. Phil. i. 17.

By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another. Rom. xiii. 35.

Unwearied have we spent the nights,
Till the Ledaean stars, so fam'd for love,

3. Courtship.

Demetrius
Made love to Nedar's daughter Helena,
And won her soul. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

If you will marry make your loves to me,
My lady is bespoken. Shakespeare's King Lear.

I to your assistance do make love,
Making the business from the common eye. Shakespeare.

The enquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it; the knowledge of truth, the preference of it; and the belief of truth, the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature. Bacon's Essays.

4. Tenderness; parental care.

L O V

The banish'd never hopes his love to see.
The lover and the love of human kind. Dryden.
7. Lewdness. He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
Nor on his knees at meditation. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
8. Unreasonable liking. The love to sin makes a man sin against his own reason.
Men in love with their opinions may not only suppose what is in question, but allege wrong matter of fact. Locke.

Then I'll sit down: give me some wine; fill full. Shak.
Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness? 1 Cor. iv. 21.
10. Principle of union. Love is the great instrument of nature, the bond and cement of society, the spirit and spring of the universe: love is such an affection as cannot properly be said to be in the soul, as the soul to be in that: it is the whole man wrapt up into one desire. South's Sermons.
11. Picturesque representation of love. The lovely babe was born with ev'ry grace:
Such was his form as painters, when they show
Their utmost art, on naked loaves bestow. Dryden's Ovid.
12. A word of endearment. 'Tis no dishonour, trust me, love, 'tis none;
I would die for thee. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
13. Due reverence to God. I know that you do not the love of God in you. John.
Love is of two sorts, of friendship and of desire; the one betwixt friends, the other betwixt lovers; the one a rational, the other a sensitive love; so our love of God consists of two parts, as effecting of God, and desiring of him. Hammond.
The love of God makes a man chaste without the labours arts of fasting, and exterior disciplines; he reaches at glory without any other arms but those of love. Taylor.
14. A kind of thin silk stuff. This leaf held near the eye, and obverted to the light, appeared full of pure pores, with such a transparency as that of a sieve, a piece of cypress, or luteboud. Boyle on Colours.

mind or body that excite love. Carrying this in one person the only two bands of goodwill, loveliness and lovingness. Sidney.
When I approach
Her loveliness, so absolute she seems,
That what the wills to do, or say,
Seems wise, virtuous, fit, discreet, best. Milt. P. L. l. 1.
If there is such a native loveliness in the sex, as to make them victorious when they are in the wrong, how restless is their power when they are on the side of truth? Addison.
LOVELORN, adj. [love and lorn.] Forsaken of one's love.
The love-lorn nightingale, Nighly to their her I found mourneth well. Milton.
LOVELY, adj. [from love.] Amiable; exciting love. The breath of Hecuba,

The confident and over-luxury French:
Do the low-rated English play at dice? Shakespeare's Hen. V.
This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever Lies the greenford; nothing she does or seems,
But final of something greater than herself,
Too noble for this place.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

There under low shades and low-brow'd rocks,
As ragged as thy locks,
In dark Cimmerian depths ever dwell.

Milton.

My eyes no object met
But low-hung clouds, that dip themselves in rain,
To shake their fleeces on the earth again.

Dryden.

No luxury found room
In low-roof'd houses, and bare walls of lome.
Vast yellow offsprings are the German's pride;
But hotter climates narrower frames obtain,
And low-built bodies are the growth of Spain.

Creech.

Whenever I am turned out, my lodge defends
Upon a low-spirited creeping family.

Swift.

We wand'ring go through dreary waistes,
Where round some mould'ring tower's pale ivy creeps,
And low-brow'd rocks hang nodding o'er the creeps.
Corruption, like a general flood,
Shall deluge all; and as verse creeping on,
Spread like a low-born milt, and blot the sun.

Pope.

To LOWER. v. a. [from low.]
1. To bring low; to bring down by way of submission.
As our high vessels pass their wat'ry way,
Let all the naval world due homage pay;
With hasty reverence their top-honours lower,
Confessing the asserted power.
The suppliant nations
Bow to its ensigns, and with lower'd sails Confess the ocean's queen. Smith's Phœbus and Hippolytus.
2. To suffer to sink down.
When the water of rivers issues out of the apertures with more than ordinary rapidity, it bears along with it such particles of loose matter as it met with in its passage through the stone, and it sustains those particles till its motion begins to remit, when by degrees it lowers them, and lets them fall.
3. To lessen; to make less in price or value.
The kingdom will lose by this lowering of interest, if it makes foreigners withdraw any of their money.
Some people know it is for their advantage to lower their interest.
To LOWER. v. n. To grow less; to fall; to sink.
The present pleasure,
By revolution lowering, does become.
The opposite of itself.
To LOWER. v. n. [It is doubtful what was the primitive meaning of this word: if it was originally applied to the appearance of the sky, it is no more than to grow low, as the sky seems to do in dark weather: if it was first used of the countenance, it may be derived from the Dutch laeren, to look askance.]
1. To appear dark, stormy, and gloomy; to be clouded.
Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious Summer by this son of York;
And all the clouds that lower'd upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried. Shaksp. Rich. III.
The lowering spring, with lavish rain,
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain.
When the heavens are filled with clouds, and all nature wears a lowering countenance, I withdraw myself from these uncomfortable scenes.

LOW

riation to the whole instrument, and descending in respect of its several parts.
LOWLAND. n. f. [low and land.] The country that is low in respect of neighbouring hills; the marsh.
What a devil's he!
His errand was to draw the lowland damps,
And noisome vapours, from the foggy fens,
Then breathe the baleful stench with all his force.
No nat'ral cause the found from brooks or bogs,
Or marshy lowlands, to produce the fogs.
LOWLY. adv. [from low.]
1. Humbly; without pride.
2. Meanly; without dignity.
LOWLINESS. n. f. [from low.]
1. Humility; freedom from pride.
Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face.
The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, faithfulness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them.
With lowliness majestic, from her seat,
And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay,
If with a true Christian lowliness of heart, and a devout fervency of soul, we perform them, we shall find, that they will turn to a greater account to us, than all the warlike preparations in which we trust.
2. Meanness; want of dignity; abject depression.
They continued in that lowliness until the time that the division between the two houses of Lancaster and York arose.
The lowliness of my fortune has not yet brought me to flatter vice; and it is my duty to give testimony to virtue.
LOWLY. adj. [from low.]
1. Humble; meek; mild.
Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart.
He did bend to us a little, and put his arms abroad: we of our parts saluted him in a very lowly and submissive manner, as looking that from him we should receive sentence of life or death.
With cries they fill'd the holy fane;
Then thus with lowly voice Ilioneus began.
The heavens are not pure in his sight, and he charges even his angels with folly; with how lowly a reverence must we bow down our souls before so excellent a being, and adore a nature so much superior to our own.
2. Mean; wanting dignity; not great.
For from the natal hour distinctive names,
One common right the great and lowly claims.
3. Not lofty; not sublime.
For all who read, and reading not disdain,
These rural poems, and their lowly strain,
The name of Venus of infern'd shall see.
LOWLY. adv. [from low.]
1. Not highly; meanly; without grandeur; without dignity.
I will shew myself highly fed, and lowly taught; I know my business is but to the court.
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glist'ring grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.
2. Humbly; meekly; modestly.
Heav'n is for thee too high
To know what passes there; be lowly wile:
Think only what concerns thee, and thy being.
Preferr'd the same request, and lowly bow'd.
LOWLY. n. f. [laiv, Irish; laen, Dutch, a stupid drone.] A scoundrel; a rascal.
King Stephen was a worthy peer,
His breeches cost him but a crown,
He thought them sixpence all too dear,
And therefore call'd the taylor lowen.
LOWNESS. n. f. [from low.]
1. Absence of height; small distance from the ground.
By th' height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth,
Or solzon follow.
The lowness of the bough where the fruit cometh, maketh the fruit greater, and to ripen better, for you shall even see, in apricots upon a wall, the greatest fruits towards the bottom.
In our Gothic cathedrals, the narrowness of the arch makes it rise in height, the lowness often opens it in breadth.
2. Meanness of condition, whether mental or external.
Nothing could have subdu'd nature
To such a lowness, but his unkind daughter.

LOZ

Now I must
To the young man send humble treaties,
And alter in the shift of lozings.
3. Want of rank; want of dignity.
The name of servants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lozings of condition.
4. Want of sublimity; contrary to loftiness.
A transcendent height, as lozings me,
Makes her not see, or not show.
His style is accommodated to his subject, either high or low; if his fault be too much lozings, that of Perilus is the hardness of his metaphors.
5. Submissiveness.
The people were in such lozings of obedience as subjects were like to yield, who had lived almost four-and-twenty years under so politic a king as his father.
6. Depression; dejection.
Hence proceeded that poverty and lozings of spirit to which a kingdom may be subject, as well as a particular person.
LOWTHOUGHTED. adj. [low and thought.] Having the thoughts with-held from sublime or heavenly meditations; mean of sentiment; narrow mindedness.
Above the smog and stir of this dim spot,
Which men call earth, and with lowthoughted care,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being O grace serene! Oh virtue heavenly fair!
Divine oblivion of lowthoughted care!
Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky,
And faith our early immortality!
LOWSPRITED. adj. [low and spirited.] Dejected; depressed; not lively; not vivacious; not spiritedly.
Severity carried to the highest pitch breaks the mind; and then, in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a lowspirited moped creature.
LOXODROMICK. n. f. [loxos, and dromos; loxodromus, Lat.]
Loxodromick is the art of oblique sailing by the rhomb, which always makes an equal angle with every meridian; that is, when you sail neither directly under the equator, nor under one and the same meridian, but across them: hence the table of rhumbs, or the transverse tables of miles, with the table of longitudes and latitudes, by which the sailor may practically find his course, distance, latitude, or longitude, is called loxodromick.
LOYAL. adj. [loyal, Fr.]
1. Obedient; true to the prince.
Of Glorier's treachery,
And of the loyal service of his son,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot.
The regard of duty in that most loyal nation overcame all other difficulties.
Loyal subjects often seize their prince,
Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence.
2. Faithful in love; true to a lady, or lover.
Hail wedded love! by thee
Founded in reason loyal, just, and pure.

The cedar, by the insigation of the loyalists, fell out with the homebians.
LOYALLY. adv. [from loyal.] With fidelity; with true adherence to a king.
The circling year I wait, with ampler stores,
And fatter pomp, to hail my native shores;
Then by my realms due homage would be paid,
For wealthy kings are loyally obey'd.
LOYALTY. n. f. [loyaltes, French.]
1. Firm and faithful adherence to a prince.
Though loyalty, well held, to fools does make
Our faith meer folly; yet he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer.
To day shalt thou behold a subject die
For truth, for duty, and for loyalty.
2. Committions flaw'd the heart
Of all their loyalties.
He had never had any veneration for the court, but only such loyalty to the king as the law required.
Unshaken, unshak'd, unshak'd,
His loyalty he kept.
LOYALTY. n. f. [loyage, French.] Of unknown etymology.
1. A rhomb.
The best builders resolve upon rectangular squares, as a mean between too few and too many angles; and through the equal inclination of the sides, they are stronger than the rhomb or loyage.
2. Loyage is a form of a medicine made into small pieces, to be held or chewed in the mouth till melted or wasted.

3. A cake of preserved fruit: both these are so denominated from the original form, which was rhomboidal.
LP. a contraction for lordship.

Yet their wine and their victuals those curmudgeon lubbers.
Lock up from my sight, in cellars and cupboards.
LUBBER. n. f. [Of this word the best derivation seems to be from lubber, said by Junius to signify in Danish fat.] A sturdy drone; an idle, fat, bulky fellow; a booby.
For tempest and showers deceiveth a many,
And ling'ring lubbers loose many a penic.
These chase the smaller shoals of fish from the main sea into the havens, leaping up and down, puffing like a fat lubber out of breath.
They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,
As if his feet were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrinking.
A notable lubber thou reportest him to be.
Tell how the drudging goblin sweats;
His shadowy flail hath thrush'd the corn,
That ten day labourers could not end;
Then lies him down the lubber fend.
Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did your lubber state mankind bestride.
How can you name that superannuated lubber?
LUBBERLY. adj. [from lubber.] Lazy and bulky.
I came at Eaton to marry Mrs. Anne Page; and she's a great lubberly boy.

The patient is relieved by the mucilaginous and the saponaceous remedies, some of which lubricate, and others both lubricate and stimulate.
To LUBRICATE. v. n. [from lubricus, Latin.] To smooth; to make slippery.
LUBRICITY. n. f. [lubricus, Latin; lubricité, French.]
1. Slipperiness; smoothness of surface.
2. Aptness to glide over any part, or to facilitate motion.
Both the ingredients are of a lubricating nature; the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preserves the mucilage from inspissation.
3. Uncertainty; slipperiness; instability.
The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same conveniences in any modification.
He that enjoyed crowns, and knew their worth, excepted them not out of the charge of universal vanity; and yet the politician is not discouraged at the inconstancy of human affairs, and the lubricity of his subject.
A state of tranquillity is never to be attained, but by keeping perpetually in our thoughts the certainty of death, and the lubricity of fortune.
4. Wantonness; lewdness.
From the lechery of these fauns, he thinks that satyr is derived from them, as if wantonness and lubricity were essential to that poem which ought in all to be avoided.
LUBRIC. adj. [lubricus, Latin.]
1. Slippery; smooth on the surface.
Of short thick fobs, whose thundering volleys float
And roul themselves over her lubric throat,
In panting murmurs.

3. Wanton; lewd. [lubrique, French.]
Why were we hurry'd down
This lubrick and adulterate age;
Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,
To encrease the steaming ordures of the stage.
LUBRICOUS. adj. [lubricus, Latin.]
1. Slippery; smooth.
The parts of water being voluble and lubricous as well as fine, it easily insinuates itself into the tubes of vegetables, and by that means introduces into them the matter it bears along with it.
2. Uncertain.
The judgment being the leading power, if it be stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, and peremptorily resolved in them, the practice will be as irregular as the conceptions.

LUC

LUBRIFICATION. n. f. [lubricus and facio, Latin.] The act of smoothing.

A twofold liquor is prepared for the inunction and lubrication of the heads of the bones; an oily one, furnished by the marrow; a mucilaginous, supplied by certain glands seated in the articulations.

LUBRICATION. n. f. [lubricus and facio, Latin.] The act of lubricating or smoothing.

The cause is lubrication and relaxation, as in medicines emollient; such as milk, honey, and mallows.

LUC. n. f. [perhaps from lucus, Latin.] A pike full grown. They give the dozen white lucers in their coat.

LUCENT. adj. [lucens, Latin.] Shining; bright; splendid. I meant the day-star should not brighter rise, Nor lend like influence from his lucens feat.

A spot like which perhaps Astronomer in the sun's lucens orb, Through his glaz'd optick tube yet never saw.

LUCID. n. f. [lucidus, Latin; lucide, French.] 1. Shining; bright; glittering.

Over his lucid arms A military vest of purple flow'd; Livelier than Meliboean.

It contracts it, preserving the eye from being injured by too vehement and lucid an object, and again dilates it for the apprehending objects more remote in a fainter light.

If at the same time a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at the distance of about a quarter of an inch, or half an inch, from that part of the glass where it is most in motion, the electric vapour which is excited by the friction of the glass against the hand will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light, and make the white paper, cloth, or finger, appear lucid like a glow-worm.

The pearly shell its lucid globe unfold, And Ptolemy warm the rip'ning ore to gold.

2. Pellucid; transparent. On the fertile banks Of Abbana and Pharpar, lucid streams.

On the transparent side of a globe, half silver and half of a transparent metal, we saw certain strange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, till we found our fingers stopped by that lucid substance.

3. Bright with the radiance of intellect; not darkened with madness. The long diffusions of the two houses, which, although they had had lucid intervals and happy pauses, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth.

Some beams of wit on other souls may fall; Strike through and make a lucid interval; But Shadwell's genuine night admits no ray, His rising fogs prevail upon the day.

I believed him in a lucid interval, and desired he would please to let me see his book. A few sensual and voluptuous persons may, for a season, eclipse this native light of the soul; but can never so wholly smother and extinguish it, but that, at some lucid intervals, it will recover itself again, and shine forth to the conviction of their conscience.

LUCIDITY. n. f. [from lucidus.] Splendor; brightness.

LUCIFEROUS. adj. [lucifer, Latin.] Giving light; affording means of discovery. The experiment is in itself not ignoble, and luciferous enough, as shewing a new way to produce a volatile salt.

LUCIFICK. adj. [lux and facio, Latin.] Making light; producing light. When made to converge, and so mixed together; though their lucifick motion be continued, yet by interfering that equal motion, which is the colorifick, is interrupted.

LUC. n. f. [luc, Dutch.] 1. Chance; accident; fortune; hap; casual event. He forc'd his neck into a noose, To show his play at fast and loose; And when he chanc'd to escape, mistook For art and subtlety, his luck.

Some such method may be found by human industry or luck, by which compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than they are divided into by the fire.

2. Fortune, good or bad. Glad of such luck the luckless lucky maid, A long time with that savage people staid, To gather breath in many miseries.

Farewel, good Salisbury, and good luck go with thee. I did demand what news from Shrewsbury. He told me, that rebellion had ill luck.

And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold. That part of mankind who have had the justice, or the luck, to pass, in common opinion, for the wisest, have followed a very different scent.

LUD

Such, how highly faster they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being luculent indeed.

The guests are found too numerous for the treat, But all, it seems, who had the luck to eat, Swear they ne'er tasted more delicious meat.

LUCILY. adv. [from lucky.] Fortunately; by good hap. It is the pencil thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth, to express the foam, which the painter with all his skill could not form.

It happens luckily for the establishment of a new race of kings upon the British throne, that the first of this royal line has all high qualifications.

LUCINESS. n. f. [from lucky.] Good fortune; good hap; casual happiness. He who sometimes lights on truth, is in the right but by chance; and I know not whether the luckiness of the accident will excuse the irregularity of his proceeding.

LUCLESS. adj. [from luck.] Unfortunate; unhappy. Glad of such luck, the luckless lucky maid, A long time with that savage people staid, To gather breath in many miseries.

Never shall my thoughts be base, Though luckless, yet without disgrace. What else but his immoderate lust of power, Pray's made and granted in a luckless hour?

LUCKY. n. f. [from luck; gelukkig, Dutch.] Fortunate; happy by chance. But I more fearful, or more lucky wight, Dismay'd with that deformed, dismal sight, Flew fast away.

Perhaps some arm more lucky than the rest, May reach his heart, and free the world from bondage. LUCRATIVE. adj. [lucratus, French; lucratus, Latin.] Gainful; profitable; bringing money.

The trade of merchandize being the most lucrative, may bear usury at a good rate; other contracts not so. The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to pursue the more dangerous way of living by war, than the more lucrative method of life by agriculture.

LUCRE. n. f. [lucrum, Latin.] Gain; profit; pecuniary advantage. In an ill sense. Malice and lucre in them Have laid this woe here.

They all the sacred mysteries of heav'n To their own vile advantages shall turn, Of lucre, and ambition. A soul supreme in each hard instance try'd, Above all pain, all anger, and all pride,

The rage of pow'r, the blast of publick breath, The lust of lucre, and the dread of death, What can be thought of the procuring letters by fraud, and the printing them merely for lucre?

LUCRIFEROUS. adj. [lucrum and fero, Latin.] Gainful; profitable. Silver was afterwards separated from the gold, but in so small a quantity, that the experiment, the cost and pains considered, was not lucriferous.

LUCRIFICK. adj. [lucrum and facio, Latin.] Producing gain. LUCRATION. n. f. [lucro, Latin.] Struggle; effort; contest. To lucubrate, n. f. [lucubro, Latin.] To watch; to study by night.

LUCUBRATION. n. f. [lucubratio, Latin.] Study by candle-light; nocturnal study; any thing composed by night. Thy lucubrations have been perused by several of our friends.

LUCUBRATORY. adj. [lucubratorius, from lucubro, Latin.] Composed by candle-light. You must have a sober dish of coffee, and a solitary candle at your side, to write an epistle lucubratory to your friend.

LUCULENT. adj. [luculentus, Latin.] 1. Clear; transparent; lucid. This word is perhaps not used in this sense by any other writer. And luculent along The purer rivers flow.

2. Certain; evident. They are against the obstinate incredulity of the Jews, the most luculent testimonies that Christian religion hath.

LUDICROUS. adj. [ludicrus, Latin.] Burlesque; merry; sportive; exciting laughter. Plutarch quotes this as an instance of Homer's judgment, in cloving a ludicrous scene with decency and instruction.

LUDICROUSLY. adv. [from ludicrous.] Sportively; in burlesque; in a manner that may excite laughter. LUDICROUSNESS. n. f. [from ludicrous.] Burlesque; sportive; merry cast or manner; ridiculousness.

LUDIFICATION. n. f. [ludificatio, Latin.] The act of mocking, or making sport with another.

LUD

LUK

LUFF. n. f. [in Scotland.] The palm of the hand; as, clap me aries in my luff.

To LUFF, v. n. [or loof.] To keep close to the wind. Sea term. Contrast your swelling sails, and luff to wind.

To LUK, v. a. [allican, Saxon; to pull; lega, Swedish, the hollow of the hand.] 1. To hall or drag; to pull with rugged violence. You gods! why this Will lug your priests and servants from your sides.

Thy bear is safe, and out of peril, Though lugg'd indeed, and wounded very ill. When savage bears agree with bears, Shall secret ones lug faints by th' ears.

See him drag his feeble legs about Like hounds ill coupled: Jowler lugs him still Through hedges. Whole pleasure is to see a strumpet tear A cynick's beard, and lug him by the hair.

2. To LUK out. To draw a sword, in burlesque language. But buff and botmen never know these cares, No time, nor trick of law, their action bars; They will be heard, or they lug out and cut.

To LUK, v. n. To drag; to come heavily: perhaps only misprinted for lags. My flagging soul flies under her own pitch, Like fowl in air, too damp, and lags along, As if she were a body in a body.

LUG. n. f. 1. A kind of small fish. They feed on salt unmerchanted pilchards, tag worms, lugs, and little crabs. 2. [In Scotland.] An ear. 3. Lug, a land measure; a pole or perch. That ample pit, yet far renown'd For the large leap which Debon did compel Ceaulin to make, being eight lugs of ground.

LUGGAGE. n. f. [from lug.] Any thing cumbersome and unwieldy that is to be carried away; any thing of more weight than value. Come bring your luggage nobly on your back.

What do you mean To doat thus on such luggage? Think not thou to find me slack, or need Thy politic maxims, or that cumbersome Luggage of war there thrown me.

How durst thou with that swollen luggage O' th' self, old in, and other baggage, T' oppose thy lumber against us? The mind of man is too light to bear much certainty among the rustling winds of passion and opinion; and if the luggage be prized equally with the jewels, none will be cast out till all be shipwrecked.

A lively faith will bear aloft the mind, And leave the luggage of good works behind. I am gathering up my luggages and preparing for my journey.

LUGUBRIOUS. adj. [lugubris, French; lugubris, Latin.] Mournful; sorrowful. A demure, or rather a lugubrious look, a sad or whining tone, makes up the sum of many mens humiliations.

LUKEWARM. adj. [The original of this word is doubted. Warmth, in Saxon, is pleos; in old Frick hli; in Dutch heute; whence probably our luke, to which warm may be added, to determine, by the first word, the force of the second; as we say, boiling hot.] 1. Moderately or mildly warm; so warm as to give only a pleasing sensation. A dreary corse, whose life away did pass, All wallow'd in his own, yet lukewarm blood, That from his wound yet welled fresh alas! May you a better feast never behold, You knot of mouth friends, smoke and lukewarm water Is your perfection.

Bathing the body in lukewarm water is of great advantage to temperate hot and sharp humours. Whence is it but from this attractive power that water, which alone diffils with a gentle lukewarm heat, will not diffil from salt of tartar without a great heat?

2. Indifferent; not ardent; not zealous. If some few continue steadfast, it is an obedience to lukewarm and languishing, that it incites not the name of passion.

This sober conduct is a mighty virtue In lukewarm patriots. LUKEWARMLY. adv. [from the adjective.] 1. With moderate Warmth. 2. With indifference. LUKEWARMNESS. n. f. [from lukewarm.]

LUM

1. Moderate or pleasing heat. 2. Indifference; want of ardour. Some kind of zeal counts all merciful moderation lukewarmness.

The defect of zeal is lukewarmness, or coldness in religion; the excess is inordinate heat and spiritual fury. Go dry your chaff and stubble, give fire to the zeal of your faction, and reproach them with lukewarmness.

To LULL, v. a. [lula, Danish; lula, Latin.] 1. To compose to sleep by a pleasing sound. There tickled softly down A gentle stream, whose murmuring wave did play Amongst the pumy stones, and made a sound To lull him soft a sleep, that by it lay.

No more these scenes my meditations aid, Or lull to rest the visionary maid. By the vocal woods and waters lull'd, And lost in lonely musing in a dream.

LULLABY. n. f. [lullus, Latin. Queen matricum fuisse deum contendit Turcius, from lull: it is observable that the nurses call sleep by, lullaby is therefore lull to sleep.] A song to still babes. Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles keft, Sung lullaby, to bring the world to rest. Philomel, with melody, Sing in your sweet lullaby; Lul a, lul a, lullaby, lul a, lul a, lullaby.

If you will let your lally know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may make my bounty further. —Marry, Sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. Drinking is the lullaby used by nurses to still crying children.

LUMBER. n. f. [lumbi, Lat. the loins.] Lumber's are pains very troublesome about the loins, and small of the back, such as precede ague fits and fevers: they are most commonly from fullness and acrimony, in common with a disposition to yawning, shuddering, and erratic pains in other parts, and go off with evacuation, generally by sweat, and other critical discharges of fevers. LUMBER. n. f. [loma, geloma, Saxon, householdstuff; lommering, the dirt of an house, Dutch.] Any thing useless or cumbersome; any thing of more bulk than value. The very bed was violated By the coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains; And thrown amongst the common lumber. One son at home Concerns thee more than many guests to come. If to some useful art he be not bred, He grows more lumber, and is worse than dead. Thy neighbour has remov'd his wretched store, Few hands will rid the lumber of the poor. If God intended not the precise use of every single atom, that atom had been no better than a piece of lumber.

Wits, who, like owls, see only in the dark; A lumber-house of books in every head. To LUMBER, v. a. [from the noun.] To heap like useless goods irregularly. In Rollo we must have so much stuff lumbered together, that not the least beauty of tragedy can appear. To LUMBER, v. n. To move heavily, as burthened with his own bulk. First let them run at large, Nor lumber o'er the meads; nor cross the wood.

LUMINARY. n. f. [luminare, Latin; luminaires, French.] 1. Any body which gives light. The great luminary Dispenses light from far. Any thing which gives intelligence. Sir John Graham, I know not upon what luminaries he espied in his face, diffused him from matlage. Any one that instructs mankind. The circulation of the blood, and the weight and spring of the air, had been reserved for a late happy discovery by two great luminaries of this island.

LUMINATION. n. f. [from lumen.] Emission of light. 1. Shining; emitting light. Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly, broken and incinerate. From chaos. How came the sun to be luminous? Not from the necessity of natural causes.

2. Enlightened.

LUN

2. Enlightened.

Earth may, industrious of herself, fetch day,
Travelling east; and with her part averfe
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

The most luminous of the prismatic colours are the yellow and orange: these affect the senses more strongly than all the rest together. Newton's Opticks.

LUMP. n. f. [lump, Dutch.]

1. A small mass of any matter.

The weed kal is by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Without this various agitation of the water, how could lumps of sugar or salt cast into it be so perfectly dissolved in it, that the lumps themselves totally disappear? Boyle.

An Ombite wretch is prisoner made;
Whose flesh torn off by lumps, the rav'nous foe
In morsels cut. Tate.

Ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,
Were forced well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dryden.
To conceive thus of the soul's intimate union with an infinite being, and by that union receiving of ideas, leads one into as gross thoughts, as a country-maid would have of an infinite butter-print, the several parts whereof being applied to her lump of butter, left on it the figure or idea there was present need of. Lacke.

2. A shapeless mass.

Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump;
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shak. Henry VI.
Blush, bluish, thou lump of foul deformity. Shakespeare.
Why might not there have been, in this great mass, huge lumps of solid matter, which, without any form or order, might be jumbled together. Kell against Burnet.

3. Mass undistinguished.

All mens honours
Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd Into what pinch he please. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
It is rare to find any of these metals pure; but copper, iron, gold, silver, lead, and tin, all promiscuously in one lump. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

4. The whole together; the gross.
If my readers will not go to the price of buying my papers by retail, they may buy them in the lump. Addison.
Other epidemical vices are rare and predominant only for a season, and must not be ascribed to human nature in the lump. Bentley's Sermons.

The principal gentlemen of several counties are stigmatized in a lump, under the notion of being papists. Swift.
To LUMP. v. a. To take in the gross, without attention to particulars.

The expenses ought to be lumped together. Ayliffe's Par.
Boccalini, in his political balance, after laying France in one scale, throws Spain into the other, which wanted but very little of being a counterpoise: the Spaniards upon this reckoned, that if Spain of itself weighed so well, they could not fail of success when the several parts of the monarchy were lumped in the same scale. Addison.

LUMPFISH. [lump and fish; lumpus, Lat.] A fort of fish.

LUMPING. adj. [from lump.] Large; heavy; great. A low word.

Nick, thou shalt have a lumping pennyworth. Arbutnot.
LUMPIST. adj. [from lump.] Heavy; gross; dull; unactive; bulky.

Out of the earth was formed the flesh of man, and therefore heavy and lumpish. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Sylvia is lumpish, heavy, melancholy. Shakespeare.

Love is all spirit: fairies sooner may Be taken tardy, when they night tricks play,
Than we; we are too dull and lumpish. Suckling.
Little terrestrial particles swimming in it after the grossest were sunk down, which, by their heaviness and lumpish figure, made their way more speedily. Burnet.

How dull and how insensible a beast
Is man, who yet would lord it o'er the rest?
Philosophers and poets vainly strove
In every age the lumpish mass to move. Dryden.

LUMPISTLY. adv. [from lumpish.] With heaviness; with stupidity.

LUMPISTNESS. n. f. [from the adjective.] Stupid heaviness.

LUMPY. adj. [from lump.] Full of lumps; full of compact masses.

One of the best spades to dig hard lumpy clays, but too small for light garden mould. Mortimer's Husbandry.
LUNACY. n. f. [from luna, the moon.] A kind of madness influenced by the moon; madness in general.
Love is merely madness, and deserves as well a dark house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished and cured is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too. Shakespeare. As you like it.

LUN

Your kindred shun your house,

As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. Shakespeare.
There is difference of lunacy: I had rather be mad with him, that, when he had nothing, thought all the ships that came into the haven his, than with you, who, when you have so much coming in, think you have nothing. Suckling.
LUNAR. adj. [lunaire, Fr. lunaris, Latin.] Relating to the moon; under the dominion of the moon.

They that have revolted that these years were but lunar years, viz. of a month, or Egyptian years, are easily confuted. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The figure of its seed much resembles a horseshoe, which Baptista Porta hath thought too low a signification, and raised the same unto a lunar representation. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

We upon our globe's last verge shall go,
And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.

LUNARY. n. f. [lunaria, Latin; lunaris, Fr.] Moonwort.
Then sprinkles the juice of rue
With nine drops of the midnight dew.
From lunar distilling. Dryden's Nymphid.

LUNATED. adj. [from luna.] Formed like a half moon.

LUNATIC. adj. [lunaticus, Latin.] Mad; having the imagination influenced by the moon.

Bedlam beggars, from low farms,
Sometimes with lunatick bars, sometimes with prayers, Enforce their charity. Shakespeare.

LUNATICK. n. f. A madman.
The lunatick, the lover, and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact:
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold;
One madman.

Shakespeare, Midsummer Night's Dream.
I dare ensure any man well in his wits, for one in the thousand that he shall not die a lunatick in Bedlam within these seven years; because not above one in about one thousand five hundred have done so. Grant's Bills.

See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,
The sot a hero, lunatick a king. Pope.

The residue of the yearly profits shall be laid out in purchasing a piece of land, and in building thereon an hospital for the reception of idiots and lunaticks. Swift.

LUNATION. n. f. [lunation, French; luna, Latin.] The revolution of the moon.

If the lunations be observed for a cycle of nineteen years, which is the cycle of the moon, the same observations will be verified for succeeding cycles for ever. Helder on Time.

LUNCH. n. f. [luncheon derives it from lunja, Spanish; luncheon, Fr. luncheon from luncheon, a small piece, Teutonic. It probably comes from clutch or clunch.] As much food as one's hand can hold.

When hungry thou stoost'st flaring, like an oaf,
I sic'd the luncheon from the barley loaf;
With crumbled bread I thicken'd well the mess. Gay.

LUNE. n. f. [luna, Latin.]

1. Any thing in the shape of an half moon.

2. Fits of lunacy or frenzy, mad freaks. The French say of a man who is but fantastical or whimsical, Il a des lunes.

Bestrew them
These dangerous, unsafe luns 't' th' king;
He must be told on't, and he shall: the office Becomes a woman best. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

3. A lish: as, the luns of a hawk.

LUNETTE. n. f. [French.] A small half moon.
Lunette is a covered place made before the courtine, which consists of two faces that form an angle inwards, and is commonly raised in fesses full of water, to serve instead of a fausse braye, and to dispute the enemy's passage: it is fix toises in extent, of which the parapet is four. Trevoux.

LUNGS. n. f. [lungen, Saxon; long, Dutch.] The lights; the part by which breath is inspired and expired.

More would I, but my lungs are wasted for,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me. Shakespeare.

The bellows of his lungs begin to swell,
Nor can the good receive, nor bad expel.
Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
And throats of brass inspir'd with iron lungs;
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.

LUNGED. adj. [from lung.] Having lungs; having the nature of lungs; drawing in and emitting air: as, the lungs in an animal body.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke. Dryden.

LUNG-GROWN. adj. [lung and grown.]

The lungs sometimes grow fast to the skin that lines the breast within; whence such as are detained with that accident are lung-grown. Harvey on Consumption.

LUR

LU'GWORT. n. f. [pulsanaria, Lat.]

The flower consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a funnel, whose upper part is cut into several segments; from its fistulous flower-cup, which is for the most part pentagonal, rises the pedicel encompassed by four embryos, which afterwards become so many seeds inclosed in the flower-cup. Miller.

LUNISOLAR. adj. [lunisolaire, French; luna and solaris, Lat.] Compounded of the revolution of sun and moon.

LUNT. n. f. [lunt, Dutch.] The matchcord with which guns are fired.

LU'PINE. n. f. [lupin, French; lupinus, Latin.] A kind of pulse.

It has a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pale, which afterward turns into a pod filled with either plain or spherical seeds: the leaves grow like fingers upon the foot stalks. Miller.

When Protogenes would undertake any excellent piece, he used to diet himself with peas and lupines, that his invention might be quick and refined. Peachment on Dravot.

Where stalks of lupines grew,
Th' ensuing season, in return, may bear
The bearded product of the golden year. Dryden's Georg.

LURCH. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from lourche, a game of draughts, much used, as he says, among the Dutch; ourche he derives from arce; so that, I suppose, those that are lost are left in lurche, in the lurch or box; whence the use of the word.]

To LURCH. v. n. To leave in a forlorn or deserted condition; to leave without help.

Will you now to peace incline,
And languish in the main design,
And leave us in the lurch. Denham.

But though th' art of a different church,
I will not leave thee in the lurch. Hudibras, p. i.

Have a care how you keep company with those that, when they find themselves upon a pinch, will leave their friends in the lurch. L'Estrange's Fables.

Can you break your word with three of the honestest best-meaning persons in the world? It is safe to take advantage of their simplicity and credulity, and leave them in the lurch at last.

Flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world, and leave us in the lurch, by some of their late refinements. Addison's Guardian.

To LURCH. v. n. [lurch, Dutch; or rather from the noun.]

1. To flirt; to play tricks.
I myself, sometimes leaving the fear of heav'n on my left-hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shakespeare.

2. To lie in wait: we now rather use lurk.
While the one was upon wing, the other stood lurching upon the ground, and flew away with the fish. L'Estrange.

To LURK. v. a. [lurk, Latin.]

1. To devour; to swallow greatly.

Too far off from great cities may hinder business; or too near lurcheth all provisions, and maketh every thing dear. Bacon's Essays.

2. To defeat; to disappoint. A word now used only in burlesque. [from the game lurch.]

He waxed like a sea;
And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurcht all swords o' th' garland. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

God never designed the use of them to be continual; by putting such an emptiness in them, as should so quickly fail and lurch the expectation. South's Sermons.

This is a sure rule, that will never deceive or lurch the sincere communicant. South's Sermons.

3. To steal privily; to slich; to pilfer.

LURCHER. n. f. [from lurch.]

1. One that watches to steal, or to betray or entrap.
I cannot represent those worthies more naturally than under the shadow of a pack of dogs, made up of finders, lurchers, and setters. Tatler, N^o. 59.

His thefts some tradesman spies,
Swift from his play the scudding lurcher flies;
Whilst ev'ry honest tongue stop thief refunds. Gay.

2. [Lurca, Latin.] A glutton; a gormandizer. Not used.

LURE. n. f. [lure, French; lure, Dutch.]

1. Something held out to call a hawk.

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And, till the stoop, the must not be full-gorg'd,
For then the never looks upon her lure. Shakespeare.

This lure the cast abroad, thinking that this fane to strike her on it. Bacon's Henry VII.

A great estate to an heir, as is a lure to all the birds of prey round about to seize on him. Bacon.

LUS

A falconer Henry is, when Emma hawks;

With her of tariffs, and of lures he talks. Prior.

2. Any enticement; any thing that promises advantage.
How many have with a smile made small account
Of beauty, and her lures, easily scorn'd.

All her assaults, on worthier things intent. Milt. Par. Reg.
This stiffneck'd pride, nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-flown hopes to reason's lure descend. Denham.

To LURE. v. n. [from the noun.] To call hawks.
Standing near one that lured loud and shrill, I had suddenly an offence, as if somewhat had broken, or been dislocated in my ear, and immediately after a loud ringing. Bacon.

To LURE. v. a. To attract; to entice; to draw.
As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd, come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcasses. Milton's Par. Lost.

A man spent one day in labour, that he might pass the other at ease; and lured on by the pleasure of this bait, when he was in vigour he would provide for as many days as he could. Temple.

Should you lure
From this dark haunt, beneath the tangled roots
Of pendant trees, the monarch of the brook, Behoves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson's Spring.

Volumes on shelter'd stalls expanded lie,
And various science lures the learned eye. Gay's Trivia.

LU'RID. adj. [luridus, Latin.] Gloomy; dismal.
Slow settling o'er the lurid grove, Unusual darkness broods. Thomson's Summer.

To LURK. v. n. [probably lurch and lurk are the same word. See LURCH.] To lie in wait; to lie hidden; to lie close.

Far in land a savage nation dwelt,
That never tasted grace, nor goodness felt;
But like wild beasts, lurking in loathsome den,
And flying fast as roebuck through the fen,
All naked. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Milbrook lurketh between two hills, a village of some eighty houses, and borrowing his name from a mill and little brook running there through. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

They lay not to live by their work,
But theevishly loiter and lurke. Tusser's Husbandry.

If sinners entice, consent not; if they say, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent. Prov. i. 11.

The wife, when danger or dishonour lurks, Safest, and seemliest by her husband stays. Milton.

The lurking gold upon the fatal tree:
Then rend it off. Dryden's Æn.

The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen;
He springs to vengeance. Pope.

I do not lurk in the dark: I am not wholly unknown to the world: I have set my name at length. Swift.

LURKER. n. f. [from lurk.] A thief that lies in wait.

LURKINGPLACE. n. f. [lurk and place.] Hiding place; secret place.

Take knowledge of all the lurkingplaces where he hideth himself. 1 Sam. xliii. 23.

LU'SCIOUS. adj. [from luscious, say some; but Skinner more probably derives it from luxurious, corruptly pronounced.]

1. Sweet, so as to nauseate.

2. Sweet in a great degree.
The food that to him now is as luscious as loches, shall shortly be as bitter as colicoquintida. Shakespeare. Othello.

With brandish'd blade rush on him, break his glaives,
And shed the luscious liquor on the ground. Milton.

Blown roses hold their sweetness to the last,

2. Whimsy; caprice; odd fancy.
Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
Three-pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation:
I do forswear them.
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd
In russet yeas, and honest kerfy noes. Shakespeare.
To reconcile our late dissenters,
Our brethren though by other venters,
Unite them and their dissent maggots,
As long and short sticks are in faggots. Hudibras, p. iii.
She prick'd his maggot, and touch'd him in the tender point; then he broke out into a violent passion. Arbutnot.

Claps on his sea-wing. Shakspeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
What charms, what magick, can over-rule the force of all these motives. Rogers.
2. The secret operations of natural powers.
The writers of natural magick do attribute much to the virtues that come from the parts of living creatures, as if they did infuse some immaterial virtue into the part covered. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
MAGICK. adj. Acting or doing by powers superior to the known power of nature; incantating; necromantick.
Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that distill'd by magick flights
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakspeare. Macbeth.
And the brute earth would lend her nerves, and shake
Till all thy magick structures rear'd to fo high,
Were shatter'd into heaps. Milton.
Like castles built by magick art in air,
That vanish at approach, such thoughts appear. Granville.

2. Lofly; arrogant; proud; insolent; despotick.
We are not magisterial in opinions, nor, dictator like, obtrude our notions on any man. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Pretences go a great way with men that take fair words, and magisterial looks, for current payment. L'Estrange.
Those men are but trapp'd who are called to govern, being invest'd with authority, but bereav'd of power; which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South's Sermon.
3. Chemically prepared, after the manner of a magistry.
Of corals are chiefly prepared the powder ground upon a marble, and the magisterial salt, to good purpose in some fevers: the tincture is no more than a solution of the magisterial salt. Grew's Medus.
- MAGISTERIALTY. n. f. [from magisterial.] Arrogancy; with an air of authority.
A downright advice may be mistaken, as if it were spoken magisterially. Bacon's Advice to Pilgrims.
Over their pots and pipes, claiming and engrossing all these wholly to themselves; magisterially censuring the wisdom of all antiquity, scoffing at all piety, and new modelling the world. South's Sermon.
- MAGISTERIALNESS. n. f. [from magisterial.] Haughtiness; airs of a master.
Peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magisterialness in matters of opinion, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact: in the one we impose upon mens understandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue.
- MAGISTRY. n. f. [magisterium, Latin.]
Magistry is a term made use of by chemists to signify sometimes a very fine powder, made by solution and precipitation; as of bismuth, lead, &c. and sometimes resin and refinous substances; as those of jalap, scamony, &c. but the most genuine acceptance is to express that preparation of any body, wherein the whole, or most part, is, by the addition of somewhat, changed into a body of quite another kind; as when iron or copper is turned into crystals of Mars or Venus. Quincy.
Paracelsus extracteth the magistry of wine, exposing it unto the extremity of cold; whereby the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit be uncongealed in the centre. Brown.
The magistry of vegetables consists but of the more soluble and coloured parts of the plants that afford it. Boyle.

Some have disputed even against magistracy itself. Atterbury.
Duelling is not only an usurpation of the divine prerogative, but it is an insult upon magistracy and good government. Clarissa.
- MAGISTRALLY. adv. [magistratus, low Latin.] Despotically; authoritatively; magisterially.
What a presumption is this for one, who will not allow liberty to others, to assume to himself such a license to controul so magistrally. Bishop Burnet's History of the Present Times.
- MAGISTRATE. n. f. [magistratus, Latin.] A man publicly invest'd with authority; a governor; an executor of the laws.
They chafe their magistrate!
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece. Shakspeare. Coriolanus.
I treat here of those legal punishments which magistrates inflict upon their disobedient subjects. Deacy of Piety.
- MAGNALITY. n. f. [magnalia, Latin.] A great thing; something above the common rate. Not used.
Too greedy of magnalities, we make but favourable experiments concerning welcome truths. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- MAGNANIMITY. n. f. [magnanimitas, French; magnanimus, Latin.] Greatness of mind; bravery; elevation of soul.
With deadly hue, an armed corse did lye,
In whose dead face he read great magnanimity. Fa. 2^{da}.

MAG

- Let but the acts of the ancient Jews be but indifferently weigh'd, from whose magnanimity, in causes of most extreme hazard, those strange and unwonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever hitherto match. Hooker, b. v.
- They had enough reveng'd, having reduc'd
Their foe to misery beneath their fears,
The rest was magnanimity to remit,
If some convenient ransom was propos'd. Milton's Agonist.
Exploding many things under the name of trifles, is a very false proof either of wisdom or magnanimity, and a great check to virtuous actions with regard to fame. Swift.
- MAGNANIMOUS. adj. [magnanimus, Latin.] Great of mind; elevated in sentiment; brave.
To give a kingdom hath been thought Greater and nobler done, and to lay down
Far more magnanimous, than to assume. Milton's Par. Reg.
In strength
All mortals I excell'd, and great in hopes,
With youthful courage and magnanimous thoughts
Of birth from heaven foretold, and high exploits. Milton.
Magnanimous industry is a resolved assiduity and care, answerable to any weighty work. Grew's Censur.
- MAGNANIMOUSLY. adv. [from magnanimous.] Bravely; with greatness of mind.
A complete and generous education fits a man to perform justly, skillfully, and magnanimously, all the offices of peace and war. Milton on Education.
- MAGNET. n. f. [magis, Latin.] The lodestone; the stone that attracts iron.
Two magnets, heav'n and earth, allure to bliss,
The larger lodestone that, the nearer this. Dryden.
It may be reasonable to ask, whether obeying the magnet be essential to iron? Locke.
- MAGNETICAL. adj. [from magnet.]
MAGNETICK. adj. [from magnet.]
1. Relating to the magnet.
Review this whole magnetick scheme. Blackmore.
Water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer, than gold; and gold is so rare as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetick effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton's Opticks.
2. Having powers correspondent to those of the magnet.
The magnet acts upon iron through all dense bodies not magnetick, nor red hot, without any diminution of its virtue; as through gold, silver, lead, glass, water. Newton's Opt.
3. Attractive; having the power to draw things distant.
The moon is magnetick of heat, as the fun is of cold and moisture. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
She should all parts to reunion bow;
She, that had all magnetick force alone,
To draw and fasten hundred parts in one. Donne.
Turn swift their various motions, or are turn'd
By his magnetick beam. Milton's Par. Reg.
4. Magnetick is once used by Milton for magnet.
Draw out with credulous desire, and lead
At will the manlike, refulgent breast,
As the magnetick hardest iron draws. Milton's Par. Reg.
- MAGNETISM. n. f. [from magnet.] Power of the lodestone; power of attraction.
Many other magnetisms, and the like attractions through all the creatures of nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

Never repose so much upon any man's single counsel, fidelity, and discretion, in managing affairs of the first magnitude, that is, matters of religion and justice, as to create in yourself, or others, a diffidence of your own judgment. K. Charles.
When I behold this goodly frame, this world,
Of heav'n and earth consisting; and compute
The magnitudes; this earth a spot, a grain,
An atom, with the firmament compar'd. Milt. Par. Reg.
Convince the world that you're devout and true;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be
A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden's Juv.
Conceive these particles of bodies to be so dispos'd amongst themselves, that the intervals of empty spaces between them may be equal in magnitude to them all; and that these particles may be compos'd of other particles much smaller, which have as much empty space between them as equals all the magnitudes of these smaller particles. Newton's Opticks.

 Until a king be by; and then his state
 Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
 Into the main of waters. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
 Where's the king?
 Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea;
 Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,
 That things might change. Shakefp. King Lear.
 He fell, and struggling in the main,
 Cry'd out for helping hands, but cry'd in vain. Dryden.
 Say, why should the collected main Itself within itself contain?
 Why to its caverns should it sometimes creep,
 And with delighted silence sleep
 On the lov'd bosom of its parent deep? Prior.
 4. Violence; force.
 He 'gan advance
 With huge force, and insupportable main,
 And towards him with dreadful fury prance. Fa. Qu.

their majority; of mischievous progenitors, a venomous and destructive progeny. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
4. Full age; end of minority.
During the infancy of Henry the IIIrd, the barons were troubled in expelling the French: but this prince was no sooner come to his majority, but the barons raised a cruel war against him. Davies on Ireland.
5. First rank. Obsolete.
Douglas, whose high deeds,
Whose hot incursions, and great name in arms,
Holds from all soldiers chief majority,
And military title capital. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
6. The office of a major.
MAIZE, or Indian Wheat. n. f.
The whole maize plant has the appearance of a reed; the male flowers are produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same plant, growing generally in a spike upon the top of the stalk; the female flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves, and are surrounded by three or four leaves, which closely adhere to the fruit until it is ripe: this plant is propagated in England only as a curiosity, but in America it is the principal support of the inhabitants, and consequently propagated with great care. Miller.
Maize affords a very strong nourishment, but more viscous than wheat. Arbutnot on Aliments.

MAK

Did I make a gain of you by any of these I sent. 2. Ger.
If Auletes, who was a negligent prince, made so much, what must now the Romans make, who govern it so wisely.
Arbutnot on Coins.
If it is meant of the value of the purchase, it was very high; it being hardly possible to make so much of lands; unless it was reckoned at a very low price.
18. To reach; to tend to; to arrive at.
Acosta recordeth, they that fail in the middle can make no land of either side.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.
I've made the port already.
And laugh securely at the lazy storm.
They ply their shatter'd oars.
To nearest land, and make the Libyan shoars.
While gentle zephyrs play in prosperous gales;
But would forsake the ship, and make the shoar.
When the winds whistle, and the tempests roar!
19. To gain.
The wind came about, and settled in the west for many days, so as we could make little or no way.
Bacon.
I have made way
To some Philistian lords, with whom to treat.
Now mark a little why Virgil is so much concerned to make this marriage, it was to make way for the divorce which he intended afterwards.
20. To force; to gain by force.
Rugged rocks are interpos'd in vain;
He makes his way o'er mountains, and contemns
Unruly torrents, and unforded streams.
The stone wall which divides China from Tartary, is reckoned nine hundred miles long, running over rocks, and making way for rivers through mighty arches.
21. To exhibit.
When thou makest a dinner, call not thy friends but the poor.
22. To pay; to give.
He shall make amends for the harm that he hath done. Lev.

bours by land, and Jason's voyage by sea for the golden fleece.
24. To turn to some use.
Whate'er they catch,
Their fury makes an instrument of war.
25. To incline; to dispose.
It is not requisite they should destroy our reason, that is, to make us rely on the strength of nature, when the is least able to relieve us.
26. To prove as an argument.
Seeing they judge this to make nothing in the world for them.
You conceive you have no more to do than, having found the principal word in a concordance, introduce as much of the verse as will serve your turn, though in reality it makes nothing for you.
27. To represent; to show.
He is not that goose and ass that Valla would make him.
28. To constitute.
Our desires carry the mind out to absent good, according to the necessity which we think there is of it, to the making or encrease of our happiness.
29. To amount to.
Whatever they were, it maketh no matter to me: God accepteth no man's person.
30. To mould; to form.
Lye not erect but hollow, which is in the making of the bed; or with the legs gathered up, which is the more wholesome.
31. To MAKE away. To kill; to destroy.
I'll find about the making of the bed.
They mow fern green, and burning of them to ashes, make the ashes up into balls with a little water.
He will not let slip any advantage to make away him whose just title, enclied by courage and goodness, may one day shake the seat of a never-secure tyranny.
The duke of Clarence, lieutenant of Ireland, was, by practice of evil persons about the king his brother, called thence away, and soon after, by finifter means, was clean made away.
How these were they that made away his brother.
Trajan would say of the vain jealousy of princes that seek to make away those that aspire to their succession, that there was never king that did put to death his successor.
My mother I slew at my very birth, and since have made away two of her brothers, and happily to make way for the purposes of others against myself.

MAK

Give poets leave to make them lives away.
What multitude of infants have been made away by those window in the breast of every one that makes or receives love.

40. To MAKE merry. To feast; to partake of an entertainment.
A hundred pound or two, to make merry withal?
The king, to make demonstration to the world, that the proceedings against Sir William Stanley, imposed upon him by necessity of state, had not diminished the affection he bare to his brother, went to Latham, to make merry with his mother and the earl.
A gentleman and his wife will ride to make merry with his neighbour, and after a day those two go to a third; in which progress they encrease like snowballs, till through their bur-thenome weight they break.
41. To MAKE much of. To cherish; to foster.
The king hearing of their adventure, suddenly falls to take pride in making much of them, extolling them with infinite praises.
That we have made to much out!
It is good discretion not to make too much of any man at the first.
The easy and the lazy make much of the gout; and yet making much of themselves too, they take care to carry it presently to bed, and keep it warm.
42. To MAKE of. What to make of, is, how to understand.
That they should have knowledge of the languages and affairs of those that lie at such a distance from them, was a thing we could not tell what to make of.
I past the summer here at Nimmeguen, without the least remembrance of what had happened to me in the spring, till about the end of September, and then I began to feel a pain
I knew not what to make of, in the same joint of my other foot.
There is another statue in brass of Apollo, with a modern inscription on the pedestal, which I know not what to make of.

ing out, cut into strange figures, which we knew not what to make of.
43. To MAKE of. To produce from; to effect.
I am astonish'd, that those who have appeared against this paper have made so very little of it.
44. To MAKE of. To consider; to account; to esteem.
Makes she no more of me than of a slave?
45. To MAKE of. To cherish; to foster.
Xavcus was wonderfully beloved, and made of, by the Turkish merchants, whose language he had learned.
46. To MAKE over. To settle in the hands of trustees.
Widows, who have tried one lover,
Trust none again till th' have made over.

MAK

The wife betimes make over their estates.
Make o'er thy honour by a deed of trust,
And give me seizure of the mighty wealth.
47. To MAKE over. To transfer.
The second mercy made over to us by the second covenant, is the promise of pardon.
Age and youth cannot be made over: nothing but time can take away years, or give them.
My wait is reduced to the depth of four inches by what I have already made over to my neck.
Moor, to whom that patent was made over, was forced to leave off coining.
48. To MAKE out. To clear; to explain; to clear to one's self.
Make out the rest, I am disorder'd fo,
I know not farther what to say or do.
Antiquaries make out the most ancient medals from a letter with great difficulty to be discerned upon the face and reverse.
It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bills of fare for some suppers.
49. To MAKE out. To prove; to evince.
There is no truth which a man may more evidently make out to himself, than the existence of a God.
Though they are not self-evident principles, yet what may be made out from them by a wary deduction, may be depended on as certain and infallible truths.
Men of wit and parts, but of short thoughts and little meditation, are apt to distrust every thing for fiction that is not the dictate of sense, or made out immediately to their senses.
We are to vindicate the just providence of God in the government of the world, and to endeavour, as well as we can, upon an imperfect view of things, to make out the beauty and harmony of all the seeming discords and irregularities of the divine administration.
Scaliger hath made out, that the history of Troy was no more the invention of Homer than of Virgil.
In the passages from our own divines, most of the reasonings which make out both my propositions are already suggested.
I dare engage to make it out, that, instead of contributing equal to the lauded men, they will have their full principal and interest at six per Cent.

There must needs be another state to make up the inequalities of this, and to salve all irregular appearances.
If his romantick disposition transport him so far as to expect little or nothing from this, he might however hope, that the principals would make it up in dignity and respect.
58. To MAKE up. To clear.
The reasons you allege, do more conduce
To the hot passion of distemper'd blood,
Than to make up a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong.
Though all at once cannot See what I do deliver out to each,
Yet I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran.
He was to make up his accounts with his lord, and by an easy undiscoverable cheat he could provide against the im-

59. To MAKE up. To accomplish; to conclude; to somplete.
Is not the lady Constance in this troop?
—I know the is not; for this match made up,
Her presence would have interrupted much.
On Wednesday the general account is made up and printed, and on Thursday published.
This life is a scene of vanity, that soon passes away, and affords no solid satisfaction but in the consciousness of doing well, and in the hopes of another life: this is what I can say upon experience, and what you will find to be true when you come to make up the account.
60. To MAKE v. n.
1. To tend; to travel; to go any way; to rush.
Oh me, lieutenant! what villains have done this?
—I think, that one of them is hereabouts,

The fathers had manag'd the charge of idolatry againft the heathens. Stillingfleet.

MAN

Let her at least the vocal brags inspire,
And tell the nations in no vulgar strain,
What wars I manage, and what wreaths I gain. Prior.
He rode up and down gallantly mounted, managing his horse; and charging and discharging his lance.
They vault from hunters to the manag'd Reed. Kneller.
3. To govern; to make tractable. Young.
Let us stick to our point, and we will manage Bull I'll warrant you. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
4. To wield; to move or use easily.

protestant subjects in the country; he made his principality to France. Addison on Italy.
To MANAGE, v. n. To superintend affairs; to transact.
Leave them to manage for thee, and to grant
What their unerring wisdom fees thee want. Dryden.
MANAGE, v. a. [manage, menage, French.]
1. Conduct; administration.

To him put
The manage of my state. Shakespeare's Temp.
This might have been prevented,
With very easy arguments of love,
Which now the manage of two kingdoms must
With fearful, bloody issue arbitrate. Shakespeare's K. John.
For the rebels which stand out in Ireland,
Expedient manage must be made, my liege,
Here further yielding them further means. Shakespeare.
Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold, and stir more than they can quiet. Bacon's Essays.
The plea of a good intention will serve to sanctify the worst actions; the proof of which is but too manifest from that scandalous doctrine of the jesuits concerning the direction of the intention, and likewise from the whole manage of the late rebellion. South's Sermons.
Whenever we take a strong bias, it is not out of a moral incapacity to do better, but for want of a careful manage and discipline to let us right at first. L'Estrange's Fables.
2. Use; instrumentality.
To think to make gold of quicksilver is not to be hoped;
for quicksilver will not endure the manage of the fire. Bacon.
3. Government of a horse.

In thy slumbers
I heard thee murmur tales of iron wars,
Speak terms of manage to the bounding steed. Shakespeare.
The horse you must draw in his career with his manage and turn, doing the curveto. Penshurst.
MANAGEABLE, adj. [from manage.]
1. Easy in the use; not difficult to be wielded or moved.
The conditions of weapons and their improvement are,
that they may serve in all weathers; and that the carriage may be light and manageable. Bacon's Essays.
Very long tubes are, by reason of their length, apt to bend, and shake by bending so as to cause a continual trembling in the objects, whereas by contrivance the glasses are readily manageable. Newton's Opticks.

2. Governable; tractable.
MANAGEABLENESS, n. f. [from manageable.]
1. Accommodation to easy use.
This disagreement may be imputed to the greater or less exactness or manageableness of the instruments employed. Boyle.
2. Tractableness; easiness to be governed.
MANAGEMENT, n. f. [management, French.]
1. Conduct; administration.

Mark with what management their tribes divide;
Some stick to you, and some to t'other side. Dryden.
An ill argument introduced with deference, will procure more credit than the profoundest science with a rough, insolent, and noisy management. Locke on Education.
The wrong management of the earl of Godolphin was the only cause of the union. Swift's Miscel.
2. Practice; transaction; dealing.
He had great managements with ecclesiastics in the view of being advanced to the pontificate. Addison on Italy.
MANAGER, n. f. [from manage.]
1. One who has the conduct or direction of any thing.
A skilful manager of the rabble, so long as they have but ears to hear, needs never enquire whether they have any understanding. South's Sermons.

MAN

The manager opens his sluice every night, and distributes the water into the town. Addison.
An artful manager, that crept between His friend and shame, and was a kind of screen. Pope.
2. A man of frugality; a good husband.
A prince of great aspiring thoughts: in the main, a ma- nager of his treasure, and yet bountiful from his own motion, wherever he discerns merit. Temple's Miscel.
The most severe censor cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of Ovid's wit; though he could have wished, that the master of it had been a better manager. Dryden.
MANAGERY, n. f. [menagerie, French.]

1. Conduct; direction; administration.
They who most exactly describe that battle, give to fill an account of any conduct or discretion in the managery of that affair, that posterity would receive little benefit in the most particular relation of it. Clarendon, l. viii.
2. Husbandry; frugality.
The court of Rome has, in other instances, so well attended its good managery, that it is not credible: crowns are conferred gratis. Deacy of Italy.
3. Manner of using.
No expert general will bring a company of raw, untrained men into the field, but will, by little bloodless skirmishes, instruct them in the manner of the fight, and teach them the ready managery of their weapons. Deacy of Italy.
MANATION, n. f. [manatio, Latin.] The act of infusing from something else.

MANICHE, n. f. [French.] A fleece.
MANICHER, n. f. [manichet, French: Skinner.] A small loaf of fine bread.

Take a small toast of manchet, dipped in oil of sweet almonds. Bacon.
I love to entertain my friends with a frugal collation; a cup of wine, a dish of fruit, and a manchet. More's Dial.
MANCHINEEL tree, n. f. [manzanilla, Latin.]
The manchineel tree has male flowers, or katkins, which are produced at remote distances from embryos, which become round fleshy fruits, in which is contained a tough woody nut, inclosing four or five flat seeds: it is a native of the West Indies, and grows equal to the size of an oak; its wood, which is sawn out into planks, and brought to England, is of a beautiful grain, will polish well and last long, and is therefore much esteemed in cabinet-makers work: in cutting down these trees, the juice of the bark, which is of a milky colour, must be burnt out before the work is begun, for its nature is so corrosive, that it will raise blisters on the skin, and burn holes in linen; and if it should happen to fall into the eyes of the labourers, they are in danger of losing their sight: the fruit is of the colour and size of the golden pippen, by which many Europeans have been deceived; some of whom have greatly suffered, and others lost their lives by eating it, which will corrode the mouth and throat: the leaves of these trees also abound with a milky juice of the same nature, so that the cattle never shelter themselves under them, and scarcely will any vegetable grow under their shade;
yet the goats eat this fruit without any injury. Miller.
To MANCIPATE, v. a. [mancipio, Latin.] To enslave; to bind; to tie.

Although the regular part of nature is seldom varied, yet the meteors, which are in themselves more unstable, and less manicipated to stated motions, are oftentimes employed to various ends. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
MANCIPATION, n. f. [from mancipate.] Slavery; involuntary obligation.

MANCIPLE, n. f. [maniceps, Latin.] The steward of a community; the purveyor: it is particularly used of the purveyor of a college.
Their maniple fell dangerously ill,
Bread must be had, their gift went to the mill:
This simkin moderately stole before,
Their steward sick, he robb'd them ten times more.

MANDAMUS, n. f. [Latin.] A writ granted by the king, so called from the initial word.
MANDARIN, n. f. A Chinese nobleman or magistrate.
MANDATARY, n. f. [mandataire, Fr. from mandat, Latin.]
He to whom the pope has, by virtue of his prerogative, and his own proper rights, given a mandate for his benefice.
Ayliffe's Paragon.

MANDATE, n. f. [mandatum, Latin.]
1. Command.
Her force is not any where so apparent as in express man- dates or prohibitions, especially upon advice and consultation going before. Hobbes, l. i.
The necessity of the times cast the power of the three estates upon himself, that his mandates should pass for laws, whereby he laid what taxes he pleased. Huswell's Vocal Fergil.
2. Precept; charge; commission, sent or transmitted.

Who

MAN

Who knows,
If the scarce bearded Cæsar have not sent
His powerful mandate to you. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
This Moor,
Your special mandate, for the state affairs,
Hath hither brought. Shakespeare's Othello.
He thought the mandate forg'd, your death conceal'd. Dryd.
This dream all powerful Juno sends, I bear
Her mighty mandates, and her words you hear:
Haste, arm your Ardeans. Dryden's Æn.
MANDATOR, n. f. [Latin.] Director.

A person is said to be a client to his advocate, but a master and mandator to his professor. Ayliffe's Paragon.
MANDATORY, adj. [mandare, Latin.] Preceptive; directory.
MANDIBLE, n. f. [mandibula, Latin.] The jaw; the instrument of mastication.
He faith, only the crocodile moveth the upper jaw, as if the upper mandible did make an articulation with the cranium. Grew's Museum.
MANDIBULAR, n. f. [from mandibula, Latin.] Belonging to the jaw.

MANDITION, n. f. [manditione, Italian.] A soldier's coat.
Skinner. A loose garment; a sleeveless jacket. Ains.
MANDREL, n. f. [mandrin, French.]

Mandrel are made with a long wooden shank, to fit stiff into a round hole that is made in the work, that is to be turned; this mandrel is called a shank, or pin-mandrel; and if the hole the shank is to fit into be very small, and the work to be fastened on it pretty heavy, then turners fasten a round iron shank or pin, and fasten their work upon it.
Mason's Mechanical Exercises.

MANDRAKE, n. f. [mandragora, Lat. mandragore, Fr.]
The flower of the mandrake consists of one leaf in the shape of a bell, and is divided at the top into several parts; the point afterwards becomes a globular soft fruit, in which are contained many kidney-shaped seeds: the roots of this plant is said to bear a resemblance to the human form. The reports of tying a dog to this plant, in order to root it up, and prevent the certain death of the person who dares to attempt such a deed, and of the groans emitted by it when the violence is offered, are equally fabulous. Miller.

Among other virtues, mandrakes has been falsely celebrated for rendering barren women fruitful: it has a soporific quality, and the ancients used it when they wanted a nar-cotick of the most powerful kind. Hill's Mat. Med.
Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake root,
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
As curses, as harsh, and as horrible to hear. Shakespeare.

Not peppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever med'cline thee to that sweet sleep. Shakespeare.
And shrieks like mandrakes, torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, hearing them, run mad. Shakespeare.
Give me of thy sons mandrakes. Gen. xxx. 14.
Go, and catch a falling star,
Get with child a mandrake root.

To MANDUCATE, v. a. [manducare, Lat.] To chew; to eat.
MANDUCATION, n. f. [manducatio, Latin.] Eating.
Manducation is the action of the lower jaw in chewing the food, and preparing it in the mouth before it is received into the stomach. Quincy.

As he who is not a holy person does not feed upon Christ, it is apparent that our manducation must be spiritual, and therefore to mastic the food, and consequently it cannot be natural flesh. Taylor's Worshy Communicant.

MANE, n. f. [mane, Dutch.] The hair which hangs down on the neck of horses, or other animals.
Dometas was tossed from the fiddle to the mane of the horse, and thence to the ground. Sidney, b. ii.
A curie comb, mane comb, and whip for a jade. Tupper.
The weak wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold;
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air. Shakespeare's Troil. and Cressida.

The horses breaking loose, ran up and down with their tails and manes on a light-fire. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

MANFULLY, adv. [from manful.] Boldly; stoutly.

MAN

Artimelia behaved herself manfully in a great fight at sea, when Xerxes stood by as a coward. Abbot.
I flew him manfully in fight. Shakespeare.
Without false 'vantage, or base treachery.
He that with this Christian armour manfully fights against, and repels, the temptations and assaults of his spiritual enemies; he that keeps his conscience void of offence, shall enjoy peace here, and for ever. Ray on Creation.
MANFULNESS, n. f. [from manful.] Stoutness; boldness.
MANGCOORN, n. f. [mengen, Dutch, to mingle.] Corn of several kinds mixed: as, wheat and rye.
MAN'GANESE, n. f. [manganesia, low Latin.]

Manganese is extremely well known by name, though the gallium use it for many different substances, that have the same effect in clearing the foul colour of their glasses: it is properly an iron ore of a poorer sort; the most perfect sort is of a dark iron grey, very heavy but brittle. Faust.
Manganese is rarely found but in an iron vein. Woodward.
MANGE, n. f. [de manger, French.] The itch or scab in cattle.

The sheep died of the rot, and the swine of the mange.

Who they should be, that thus have mangled you? Shak.

Your dissonour
Mangle true judgment, and betwixt the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shakespeare.
Thoughts my tormentors arm'd with deadly stings,
Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise
Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb,
Or medicinal liquor can assuage. Milton's Agonistes.

The triple porter of the Stygian feat,
With lolling tongue, lay fawning at thy feet,
And, seiz'd with fear, forgot his mangled meat. Dryden.
What could swords or poison, racks or flames,
But mangle and disjoint this brittle frame?
More fatal Henry's words; they murder Emma's fame. Prior.

It is hard, that not one gentleman's daughter should read or understand her own natural tongue; as any one may find, who can hear them when they are disposed to mangle a play or a novel, where the least word out of the common road disconcerts them. Swift to a young Lady.

They have joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel, only to shorten a syllable, so that most of the books we see now-a-days, are full of those manglings and abbreviations. Swift's Let. to the Ld. Treasurer.
Inextricable difficulties occur by mangling the sense, and curtailing authors. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
MAN'GLER, n. f. [from mangle.] A hacker; one that destroys bunglingly.

Since after thee may rise an impious line,
Coarse manglers of the human face divine;
Paint on, till fate dissolve thy mortal part,
And live and die the monarch of thy art. Tickell.

MAN'GO, n. f. [mangostan, Fr.] A fruit of the isle of Java, brought to Europe pickled.
The fruit with the hulk, when very young, makes a good preserve, and is used to pickle like mangoes. Mortimer.

Must manifest thee worthiest to be heir

Of all things. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
Were he not by law withstood, Dryden's Juv.
He'd manifest his own inhuman blood.
It may be part of our employment in eternity, to contenplate the works of God, and give him the glory of his wisdom manifested in the creation. Roy on Creation.

MAN'IFESTATION. n. f. [manifestation, Fr. from manifest.]
Discovery; publication; clear evidence.
Though there be a kind of natural right in the noble, wife and virtuous, to govern them which are of servile disposition; nevertheless, for manifestation of this their right, the assent of them who are to be governed seemeth necessary. Hooker.
As the nature of God is excellent, so likewise it is to know him in those glorious manifestations of himself in the works of creation and providence. Tillotson's Sermons.
The secret manner in which acts of mercy ought to be performed, requires this publick manifestation of them at the great day. Atterbury's Sermons.

MAN

the larch tree, of a very different genus of the ash, and the very tree which produces oil of turpentine; this is called Biançon manna, from the country where it is produced: our black thorn, or floc tree, sometimes yield a true manna from the ribs of the leaves in Autumn; but it is in a very small quantity: there is another fort called the manna Persia, produced from a small prickly shrub about four or five feet high, growing in Egypt, Armenia, Georgia, and Persia. The Hebrews, who had been acquainted with the last mentioned fort of manna, when they found a miraculous food in the desert resembling it, did not scruple to call it manna: this was a conjecture the more natural to them; as they saw plainly that this descended from the heavens in form of a dew, and received opinion at that time was, that the Oriental manna was formed in the same manner; that it was a dew from the clouds concreted on the plants, none supposing, in those early times, that it was the natural juice of the shrub upon which it was found: it is however evident, that this was not of the nature of manna, because it melted away as the sun grew hot, whereas manna hardens in that heat. It is but lately that the world were convinced of the mistake of manna being an aerial produce, by an experiment being made by covering a tree with sheets in the manna season, and the finding as much manna on it afterwards as on those which were open to the air and dew. Manna is celebrated, both by the ancients and moderns, as a gentle and mild cathartic. Hill.

It would be well inquired, whether manna doth fall but upon certain herbs, or leaves only. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The manna in heaven will suit every man's palate. Locke.

2. Custom; habit; fashion.

MAN

Have broke their backs with laying manors on them
For this great journey. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
MANQUELLER. n. f. [man and cellan, Saxon.] A murderer;
a mankiller; a manslaughterer.

This was not Kayne the manqueller, but one of a gentler spirit and milder sex, to wit, a woman. Carw.
MANSE. n. f. [manis, Latin.] A parsonage house.
MANSTON. n. f. [manis, Latin.]

1. Place of residence; abode; house.
All these are but ornaments of that divine spark within you, which being descended from heaven, could not elsewhere pick out so sweet a manston. Sidney.
A fault no less grievous, if so be it were true, than if some king should build his manston-house by the model of Solomon's palace. Hooker, b. v.

To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His manston, and his titles in a place,
From whence himself does fly? he loves us not. Shakep.
Thy manston wants thee, Adam, rise
First man, of men innumerable ordain'd;
First father! call'd by thee, I come thy guide
To the garden of bliss, thy seat prepar'd.
A manston is provided thee; more fair
Than this, and worthy heav'n's peculiar care,
Not fram'd of common earth. Dryden.

2. Residence; abode.
These poets near our princes sleep,
And in one grave their manstons keep. Denham.
MANSLEUGHTER. n. f. [man and slaughter.]

1. Murder; destruction of the human species.
The whole pleasure of that book standeth in open man- slaughter and bold bawdry. Afchan's Schoolmaster.

To overcome in battle, and subdue
Nations, and bring home spoils, with infinite Manslaught, shall be held the highest pitch
Of human glory. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

2. [In law.] The act of killing a man not wholly without fault, though without malice.
MANSAYER. n. f. [man and slay.] Murderer; one that has killed another.

Cities for refuge for the manslayer. Num. xxv. 6.
MANSUETE. adj. [mansuetus, Lat.] Tame; gentle; not ferocious; not wild.

This holds not only in domestick and mansuete birds; for then it might be thought the effect of curation or institution, but also in the wild. Ray on Creation.

MANSUETUDE. n. f. [mansuetudo, French; mansuetudo, Lat.]
Tameless; gentleness.

The angry lion did present his paw,
Which by consent was given to mansuetude;
The fearful hare her ears, which by their law Humility did reach to fortitude. Herbert.

MANTEL. n. f. [mantel, old Fr.] Work raised before a chimney to conceal it, whence the name, which originally signifies a cloak.

From the Italians we may learn how to raise fair mantels within the rooms, and how to disguise the shafts of chimnies. Watson's Architecture.

If you break any china on the mantel-tree or cabinet, gather up the fragments. Swift.

MANTELET. n. f. [manlelet, French.]

1. A small cloak worn by women.
2. [In fortification.] A kind of moveable penthouse, made of pieces of timber sawed into planks, which being about three inches thick, are nailed one over another to the height of almost six feet; they are generally cas'd with tin, and set upon little wheels; so that in a siege they may be driven before the pioneers, and serve as blinds to shelter them from the enemy's small-shot: there are other manletelets covered on the top, whereof the miners make use to approach the walls of a town or castle. Harris.

MANTI'GER. n. f. [man and tiger.] A large monkey or baboon.

Near these was placed, by the black prince of Monomotapas's side, the glaring cat-a-mountain, and the man-micking mantiger. Arbuth. and Pope.

MANTEL. n. f. [mantell, Welsh.] A kind of cloak or garment thrown over the rest of the dress.

We, well-cover'd with the night's black mantle,
At unawares may beat down Edward's guard,
And seize himself. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Poor Tom drinks the green mantle of the standing pool.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

The day begins to break, and night is fled, Shakespeare.
Whose pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth.

Their actions were covered and disguised with mantles, very usual in times of disorder, of religion and justice.
Hayward's Edward VI.

The herald and children are clothed with mantles of water green fatten; but the herald's mantle is streame'd with gold. Bacon's New Atlantis.

MAN

Before the sun,
Of God, as with a mantle, dark and at the voice
The rising world of waters dark and deep,
Won from the void and formless infinite. Milton.

By which the beauty of the earth appears,
The divers-colour'd mantle which the weaves,
Upon loosening of his mantle the eggs fell from him at unawares, and the eagle was a third time defeated. L'Estrange.

Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has weav'd
A silken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours: gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress,
And Venus shall the texture bleis. Prior.

A spacious veil from his broad shoulders flew,
That set the unhappy Phaeton to view;
The flaming chariot and the steeds it shew'd,
And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd. Adisson.

To MAN'TLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloke, to cover;
to disguise.

As the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness; so their rising senses
Begin to chase the ignorant fumes, that mantle
Their clearer reason. Shakespeare's Tempest.

I left them
I th' filthy mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to th' chiu. Shakespeare's Tempest.

To MAN'TLE. v. n. [The original of the signification of this word is not plain. Skinner considers it as relative to the expansion of a mantle: as, the hawk mantleth; the spreads her wings like a mantle.]

1. To spread the wings as a hawk in pleasure.
The iwan with arch'd neck,
Between her white wings mantling, rows
Her state with cary feet. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

2. To joy; to revel.
My frail fancy fed with full delight
Doth bathe in bliss, and mantleth most at ease;
Ne thinks of other heaven, but how it might
Her heart's desire with most contentment please. Spenser.

3. To be expanded; to spread luxuriantly.
The pair that clad
Each shoulder broad, came mantling o'er his breast
With regal ornament. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.

The mantling vine
Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps Luxuriant. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,
That crawls along the side of yon small hill,
Plucking ripe clusters. Milton.

You'll sometimes meet a fop, of nicest tread,
Whose mantling peruke veils his empty head.
He with the Nais went to dwell,
Leaving the cedar'd feasts of Jove
And where his mazy waters flow,
He gave the mantling vine, to grow
A trophy to his love. Penton's Ode to Lord Gower.

4. To gather any thing on the surface; to froth.
There are a sort of men, whose villages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be drest in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit. Shakespeare.

It drinketh fresh, flowereth, and mantleth exceedingly.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 46.

From plate to plate your eye-balls roll,
And the brain dances to the mantling bowl. Pope's Horace.

5. To ferment; to be in sprightly agitation.
When mantling blood
Flow'd in his lovely cheeks; when his bright eyes
Spark'd with youthful fires; when ev'ry grace Shone in the father, which now crowns the son. Smith.

MAN'TUA. n. f. [this is perhaps corrupted from mantua, Fr.]
A lady's gown.

Not Cynthia, when her mantua's pinn'd awry,
E'er felt such rage, resentment, and despair,
As thou, sad virgin! for thy ravish'd hair.
How naturally do you apply your hands to each other's lappets, ruffles, and *mantua*s. Pope.

MAN'TUAMAKER. n. f. [mantua and maker.] One who makes gowns for women.

By profession a mantuamaker: I am employed by the most fashionable ladies. Addison's Guardian.

MANUAL. adj. [manuallis, Latin; manuel, French.]

1. Performed by the hand.
The speculative part of painting, without the assistance of manual operation, can never attain to that perfection which is its object. Dryden's Duffresny.

2. Used

MAN

2. Used by the hand.
The treasurer obliged himself to expiate the injury, to procure some declaration under his majesty's sign manual. Clarendon.

MANUAL. n. f. A small book, such as may be carried in the hand.

This manual of laws, filed the confessor's laws, contains but few heads. Hale's Common Law of England.

In those prayers which are recommended to the use of the devout persons of your church, in the manuals and offices allowed them in our own language, they would be careful to have nothing they thought scandalous. Stillingfleet.

MANUDIAL. adj. [manudialis, Lat.] Belonging to spoil; taken in war. Diët.

MANUBRIUM. n. f. [Latin.] A handle.
Though the fucker move easily enough up and down in the cylinder by the help of the manubrium, yet if the manu- brium be taken off, it will require a considerable strength to move it. Boyle.

MANUDUCTION. n. f. [manuductio, Latin.] Guidance by the hand.

We find no open tract, or constant manuduction, in this labyrinth. Preface to Brown's Vulgar Errors.

That they are carried by the manuduction of a rule, is evident from the constant steadiness and regularity of their motion. Glanville.

This is a direct manuduction to all kind of sin, by abusing the confidence with undervaluing persuasions concerning the malignity and guilt even of the foulest. Saule's Sermons.

MANUFACTURE. n. f. [manus and facto, Latin; manufacture, French.]

1. The practice of making any piece of workmanship.
2. Any thing made by art.

Heav'n's pow'r is infinite: earth, air, and sea,
The manufacture mads the making pow'r obey. Dryden.

The peasants are clothed in a coarse kind of canvas, the manufacture of the country. Addison on Italy.

To MANUFACTURE. v. a. [manufacture, French.] To make by art and labour; to form by workmanship.

MANUFACTURER. n. f. [manufacturier, French; manufacturist, Lat.] A workman; an artificer.

In the practices of artificers and the manufacturers of various kinds, the end being proposed, we find out ways of compelling things for the several uses of human life. Watts.

To MANUFACTURE. v. a. [manumitto, Latin.] To set free; to dismiss from slavery.

A constant report of a danger so eminent run through the whole cattle, even into the deep dungeons, by the compassion of certain manumissid slaves. Kneller's Hist. of the Turk.

He presents
To thee renown'd for piety and force,
Poor captives manumit'd, and matchless horse. Waller.

MANUMISSION. n. f. [manumissio, Fr. manumissio, Lat.] The act of giving liberty to slaves.

Slaves wore iron rings until their manumission or preferment. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

The pileus was somewhat like a night-cap, as the symbol of liberty, and therefore given to slaves at their manumission.
Arbutnot on Coins.

To MANUMIT. v. a. [manumitto, Latin.] To release from slavery.

Help to manumit and release him from those servile drudge-ries to vice, under which those remain who live without God. Government of the Tongue.

Thou wilt beneath the burthen bow,
And glad receive the manumitting blow
On thy shav'd slavish head. Dryden's Juvenal.

MANURABLE. adj. [from manure.] Capable of cultivation.
This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every manor. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

MANURANCE. n. f. [from manure.] Agriculture; cultivation.
An obsolete word, worthy of revival.

Although there should none of them fall by the sword, yet they being kept from manuranc, and their cattle from running abroad, by this hard restraint they would quickly devour one another. Spenser on Ireland.

To MANURE. v. a. [manuor, French.]

1. To cultivate by manual labour.
They mock our scant manurings, and require More hands than ours to lop their wanton growth. Milt.

2. To dung; to fatten with composts.
Fragments of shells, reduced by the agitation of the sea to powder, are used for the manuring of land. Woodward.

Revenge her slaughter'd citizens,
Or spare their fate: the corps of half her senate Manure the fields of Thebais, while we Sit here, deliberating in cold debates. Addison's Cato.

MANURE. n. f. [from the verb.] Soil to be laid on lands;
dung or compost to fatten land.

When the Nile from Pharian fields is fled,
The fat manure with heav'nly fire is warm'd. Dryden.

MAN

Mud makes an extraordinary manure for land that is sandy.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

MANUREMENT. n. f. [from manure.] Cultivation; improvement.

The manurement of wits is like that of soils, where before the pains of tilling or sowing, men consider what the mould will bear. Watson on Education.

MANURER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who manures land; a husbandman.

MANUSCRIPT. n. f. [manuscript, Fr. manuscriptum, Latin.] A book written, not printed.

A collection of rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabic, and fought in the most remote parts by the diligence of Erpenius, the most excellent linguist, were upon sale to the jesuits. Watson.

Her majesty has perused the manuscript of this opera, and given it her approbation. Dryden's Dedication to K. Arthur.

MANV. adj. comp. more, superl. most. [manig, Saxon.]

1. Consisting of a great number; numerous; more than few.
Our enemy, and the destroyers of our country, slew many of us. Judg. xvi. 24.

When many atoms descend in the air, the same cause which makes them be many, makes them be light in proportion to their multitude. Disby on the Soul.

The apostles never give the least directions to Christians to appeal to the bishop of Rome for a determination of the many differences which, in those times, happened among them. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Marking number indefinite.
Both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, brought bracelets. Exod. xxxv. 22.

3. Powerful; with too, and in low language.
They come to vie power and expence with those that are too high, and too many, for them. L'Estrange's Fables.

MANV. n. f. [This word is remarkable in the Saxon for its frequent use, being written with twenty variations: man-geo, manego, maniegeo, manigo, manigu, manio, man-nu, manyegeo, maneegeo, manigu, manize, manigo, menegeo, menego, menegu, meniegeo, menigo, menigu, memo, menu.]

1. A multitude; a company; a great number; people.
After him the raical many ran,
Heaped together in rude rabblement. Fairy Queen.

O thou fond many! with what loud applause
Did'st thou beat heav'n with blessing Bolingbroke. Shakep.

I had a purpose now
To lead our many to the holy land;
Left rest and lying still might make them look Too near into my state. Shakep. Henry IV.

A care-craz'd mother of a many children. Shakep.

The vulgar and the many are fit only to be led or driven, but by no means fit to guide themselves. South's Sermons.

There parting from the king the chiefs divide,
And wheeling East and West, before their many ride. Dryd.

He is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment of his life. Tillotson's Sermons.

Seeing a great many in rich gowns, he was amazed to find that persons of quality were up so early. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Many, when it is used before a singular noun, seems to be a substantive.

Thou art a collop of my flesh,
And for thy sake have I shed many a tear. Shakepeare.

He is beset with enemies, the meanest of which is not without many and many a way to the wreaking of a malice. L'Estrange's Fables.

Broad were their collars too, and every one
Was set about with many a costly stone. Dryden.

Many a child can have the distinct clear ideas of two and three long before he has any idea of infinity. Locke.

3. Many is used much in composition.

MANYCOLOURED. adj. [many and colour.] Having many colours.

Hail manycoloured messenger, that ne'er Do'st disobey the voice of Jupiter. Shakep. Tempest.

He hears not me, but on the other side
A manycolour'd peacock having spy'd,
Leaves him and me. Donne.

The hoary majesty of spades appears;
Puts forth one manly leg, to fight reveal'd,
The rest his manycoloured robe conceal'd. Pope.

MANYCORNED. adj. [many and corner.] Polygonal; having many corners.

Search those manycorn'd minds,
Where woman's crooked fancy turns and winds. Dryden.

MANYHEADED. adj. [many and head.] Having many heads.
Some of the wiser feeling that a popular licence is indeed the manyheaded tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Mufdorus their chief. Sidney, b. iii.

The proud Ducfla came High mounted on her manyheaded beast. Fairy Queen.

The

MAR

The manyheaded beast hath broke;
Or shaken from his head, the royal yoke.
Those were the preludes of his fate,
That form'd his manhood to subdue
The hydra of the manyheaded hissing crew.
MANYLANGUED. adj. [many and language.] Having many languages.

Seek Atrides on the Spartan shore;
He, wand'ring long, a wider circle made,
And manylanguage'd nations has survey'd.
MANYPEOPLED. adj. [many and people.] Numerously populous.

He from the manypeople'd city flies;
Contentments their labours, and the drivers cries.
MANYTIMES, an adverbial phrase. Often; frequently.
They are Roman catholic in the device and legend, which are both of them manytimes taken out of the scriptures.

MAP. n. f. [mappe, low Latin.] A geographical picture on which lands and seas are delineated according to the longitude and latitude.

Zeliane earnestly entreated Dorus, that he would bestow a map of his little world upon her, that she might see whether it were troubled with such uninhabitable climes of cold deserts, and hot rages, as her's was.

I will take the map of Ireland, and lay it before me, and make mine eyes my schoolmasters, to give my understanding to judge of your plot.
Old coins are like so many maps for explaining the ancient geography.

O'er the map my finger taught to stray,
Cross many a region marks the winding way;
From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove,
And grow a mere geographer by love.

To MAP. v. a. [from the noun.] To delineate; to set down.
I am near to the place where they should meet, if Pisanio have map'd it right.

MAPLE tree. n. f.
The maple tree hath jagged or angular leaves; the seeds grow two together in hard-winged vessels: there are several species, of which the greater maple is falsely called the sycamore tree: the common maple is a tree frequent in hedge-rows.

The platane round,
The carver holme, the mapple seldom inward found.

MAPPERY. n. f. [from map.] The art of planning and designing.

The still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike
When furies call them on;
They call this bedwork, mapp'ry, closet war.

To MAR. v. a. [amoyman, Saxon.] To injure; to spoil; to hurt; to mischief; to damage. Obsolete.

Loss is no shame, nor to be less than foe,
But to be less than himself, doth mar.
Both looter's lot, and victor's praise also.

The master may here only stumble, and perchance fall in teaching, to the marring and maiming of the scholar in learning.

When priests are more in words than matter,
When brewers marr their malt with water.

I pray you mar no more trees with writing songs in their barks.
— I pray you mar no more of my verses with reading them ill-favour'dly.

Beware thine honour, be not then disgrac'd,
Take care thou mar not when thou think'st to mend.

Aumarle became the man that all did mar,
Whether through indiscretion, chance, or worse.

The ambition to prevail in great things is less harmful than that other, to appear in every thing; for that breeds confusion, and marrs business, when great in dependencies.

O! could we see how cause from cause doth spring!
How mutually they link'd and folded are:
And hear how oft one disagreeing string
The harmony doth rather make than marr!

Ire, envy, and despair,
Marr'd all his borrow'd visage, and betray'd Him counterfeit.

Had the been there, untimely joy through all Mens hearts diffus'd, had marr'd the funeral.

'Tis much unsafe my fire to disobey:
Not only you provoke him to your coft,
But mirth is marr'd, and the good cheer is lost.

MARANATHA. n. f. [Syriack.] It signifies, the Lord comes, or, the Lord is come: it was a form of the denouncing or anathematizing among the Jews. St. Paul pronounces, If any love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha, which is as much as to say, May'st thou be devoted to the greatest of evils; and to the utmost severity of God's judgments; may the Lord come quickly to take vengeance of thy crimes.

MAR

MARASMUS. n. f. [μαρασμός, from μαρῖναι.] A consumption, in which persons waste much of their substance.

Marasmus, and wide-wasting pestilence.
A marasmus imports a consumption following a fever; a consumption or withering of the body, by reason of a natural extinction of the native heat, and an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat.

MA'RBLE. n. f. [marbre, French; marmor, Latin.]
1. Stone used in statues and elegant buildings, capable of a bright polish, and in a strong heat calcining into lime.

He plies her hard, and much rain wears the marble.
Whole as the marble, founded as the rock.

Thou marble hew'd, ere long to part with breath
And hous'd rear'd, un mindful of thy death.

Some dry their corn infected with the brine,
Then grind with marbles, and prepare to dine.

The two flat sides of two pieces of marble will more easily approach each other, between which there is nothing but water or air, than if there be a diamond between them; not that the parts of the diamond are more solid, but because the parts of water being more easily separable, give way to the approach of the two pieces of marble.

2. Little balls of marble with which children play.
Marbles taught him percussion, and the laws of motion; nut-crackers the use of the lever.

3. A stone remarkable for the sculpture or inscription; as, the Oxford marbles.

MA'RBLE. adj.
1. Made of marble.
Pygmalion's fate revertit is mine;
His marble love took flesh and blood,
All that I worshipp'd as divine,
That beauty, now 'tis underfoot,
Appears to have no more of life,
Than that whereof he fram'd his wife.

2. Variegated, or red like marble.
Shall I see far-fetched inventions? shall I labour to lay marble colours over my ruinous thoughts? or rather, though the pureness of my virgin-mind be stained, let me keep the true simplicity of my word.

The appendix shall be printed by itself, stitched, and with a marble cover.

To MA'RBLE. v. a. [marbrer, French, from the noun.] To variegate, or vein like marble.
A sheet of very well streaked marbled paper did not cast any of its distinct colours upon the wall with an equal diffusion.

MA'RBLED. adj. [marbled, French, from the noun.]
Marbled with sage the hard'ning cheese the press'd,
And yellow butter Marian's skill profess'd.

MARBLEHEARTED. adj. [marble and heart.] Cruel; insensible; hard-hearted.
Ingratitude! thou marblehearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou shew'st thee in a child,
Than the sea monster.

MA'RCASITE. n. f.
The term marcasite has been very improperly used by some for bismuth, and by others for zink: the more accurate writers however always express a substance different from either of these by it, sulphureous and metallic. The marcasite is a solid hard fossil, of an obscurely and irregularly fibrous structure, of a bright glittering appearance, and naturally found in continued beds among the veins of ores, or in the fissures of stone: the variety of forms this mineral puts on is almost endless: as it is generally found among the ores of metals, it is frequently impregnated with particles of them, and of other fossil bodies, and thence assumes various colours and degrees of hardness. There are however only three distinct species of it; one of a bright gold colour, another of a bright silver, and a third of a dead white: the silvery one seems to be peculiarly meant by the writers on the Materia Medica. Marcasite is very frequent in the mines of Corn-wall, where the workmen call it mundick, but more so in Germany, where they extract vitriol and sulphur from it, besides which it contains a quantity of arsenick.

The writers of minerals give the name pyrites and marcasites indifferently to the same sort of body: I refrain the name of pyrites wholly to the nodules, or those that are found lodged in strata that are separate: the marcasite is part of the matter that either constitutes the stratum, or is lodged in the perpendicular fissures.

The acid salt dissolved in water is the same with oil of sulphur per campanam, and abounding much in the bowels of the earth, and particularly in marcasites, unites itself to the other ingredients of the marcasite, which are bitumen, iron, copper, copper, and earth, and with them compounds alum, vitriol, and sulphur: with the earth alone it compounds alum; with the metal alone, or metal and earth together, it compounds vitriol; and with the bitumen and earth it compounds sulphur: whence it comes to pass, that marcasites abound with those three minerals.

Here marcasites in various figures wait
To ripen to a true metallic state.

MARCH. n. f. [from Mars.] The third month of the year.
March is drawn in tawny, with a fierce aspect, a helmet upon his head, to shew this month was dedicated to Mars.

To MARCH. v. n. [marcher, French; for varicare, Menage, from Mars, Junius.]
1. To move in military form.

Well march we on,
To give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd.

He march'd in battle array with his power against Arphaxad.
Maccabeus march'd forth, and slew five-and-twenty thousand persons.

My father, when some days before his death
He order'd me to march for Utica, Went o'er me.

2. To walk in a grave, deliberate, or stately manner.
Plexitus finding that if nothing else, famine would at last bring him to destruction, thought better by humbleness to creep where by pride he could not march.

Doth York intend no harm to us,
That thus he marcheth with three arm in arm.

Our bodies, ev'ry footstep that they make,
March towards death, until at last they die.

Like thee appear,
Like thee, great son of Jove, like thee;
When clad in rising majesty,
Thou march'dst down o'er Delos' hills.

The power of wisdom march'd before.
To MARCH. v. n.
1. To put in military movement.

Cyrus marching his army for divers days over mountains of snow, the dazzling splendor of its whiteness prejudiced the sight of very many of his soldiers.

2. To bring in regular procession.
March them again in fair array,
And bid them form the happy day;
The happy day design'd to wait
On William's fame, and Europe's fate.

MARCH. n. f. [marcher, French.]
1. Movement; journey of soldiers.
These troops came to the army harrass'd with a long and wearisome march, and cast away their arms and garments; and fought in their shirts.

Who should command, by his Almighty nod,
These chosen troops, unconscious of the road,
And unacquainted with th' appointed end,
Their marcher to begin, and thither tend.

Their march begins in military fate.
2. Grave and solemn walk.
Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full rebounding line,
The long majestic march, and energy divine.

3. Deliberate or laborious walk.
We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it.

4. Signals to move.
The drums presently striking up a march, they make no longer stay, but forward they go directly towards Neoflat.

5. Marcher, without singular. [maris, Gothick; mearc, Saxon; marche, French.] Borders; limits; confines.
They of those marches Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pillaging borderers.

The English colonies were enforced to keep continual guards upon the borders and marches round them.
It is not fit that a king of an island should have any marches or borders but the four seas.

MARCHER. n. f. [from marcher, French.] President of the marches or borders.
Many of our English lords made war upon the Welshmen at their own charge; the lands which they gained they held to their own use; they were called lords marchers, and had royal liberties.

MARCHIONESS. n. f. [feminine, formed by adding the English female termination to the Latin marchus.] The wife of a marquise.

The king's majesty
Does purpose honour to you, no less flowing Than marchioness of Pembroke.

From a private gentlewoman he made me a marchioness, and from a marchioness a queen, and now he intends to crown my innocency with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon's Apophthegms.

The lady marchioness, his wife, solicited very diligently the timely preservation of her husband. Clarendon, b. viii.

MARCHPANE. n. f. [massopane, French.] A kind of sweet bread, or biscuit.

Along whose ridge such bones are met,
Like comfits round in marchpane set.

MA'RCID. adj. [marcidus, Latin.] Lean; pining; withered.
A burning colliquative fever, the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing its adhesion upon the drier and fleshy parts, changes into a marcid fever.

He on his own fish pours the noblest oil;
That to your marcid dying herbs assign'd,
By the rank smell and taste betrays its kind.

MA'RCOUR. n. f. [marcor, Latin.] Leanness; the state of withering; waste of flesh.
Considering the exolution and languor ensuing the action of venery in some, the extenuation and marcor in others, it much abridgeth our days.

A marcor is either imperfect, tending to a lesser withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an entire wasting of the body, excluding all means of cure.

MARE. n. f. [mare, Saxon.]
1. The female of a horse.
A pair of couriers born of heavenly breed,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial fires,
By substituting mares, produc'd on earth.

2. [From mare, the name of a spirit imagined by the nations of the north to torment sleepers.] A kind of torpor or stagnation, which seems to press the stomach with a weight; the night hag.

Mab, his merry queen by night,
Besides young folks that lie upright;
In elder times the mare that hight,
Which plagues them out of measure.

Mulhrooms cause the incubus, or the mare in the stomach.
MA'RESCHAL. n. f. [mareschal, French, derived by Junius from mare, the female of an horse.] A chief commander of an army.

O William; may thy arms advance,
That he may lose Dinant next year,
And so be marshal of France.

MA'RGARITE. n. f. [margarita, Latin; margarite, French.] A pearl.
Silver is the second metal, and signifies purity; among the planets it holdeth with luna, among precious stones with the margarite or pearl.

MA'RGARITES. n. f. An herb. Ainsf.
MARGE. n. f. [marge, Latin; marge, French.]
MA'RGIN. n. f.
1. The border; the brink; the edge; the verge.

He drew his flaming sword, and struck
At him so fiercely, that the upper marge
Of his sevenfold shield away it took.

Met we on hill, in date, forest, or mead,
Or on the beached margin of the sea.
An airy crowd came rushing where he stood,
Which fill'd the margin of the fatal flood.

2. The edge of a page left blank, or fill'd with a short note.
As much love in rhimes,
As would be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper
Writ on both sides the leaf, margin and all.

Reconcile those two places, which both you and the margins of our bibles acknowledge to be parallel.
He knows in law, nor text, not margin.

3. The edge of a wound or sore.
All the advantage to be gathered from it is only from the evenness of its margin, the purpose will be as fully answered by keeping that under only.

MA'RGINAL. n. f. [marginal, French, from margin.] Placed, or written on the margin.
We cannot better interpret the meaning of these words than pope Leo himself expoundeth them, whose speech concerning our Lord's ascension may serve instead of a marginal gloss.

What remarks you find worthy of your riper observation note with a marginal star, as being worthy of your second year's review.

MA'RGINATED. adj. [marginatus, Lat. from margin.] Having a margin.
MA'RGRAVE. n. f. [march and graf, German.] A title of sovereignty in Germany; in its original import, keeper of the marches or borders.

MA'RIETS. n. f. A kind of violet.
MA'RGOLD. n. f. [Mary and gold.] A yellow flower, devoted, I suppose, to the virgin.

MAR

The marigold hath a radiated discous flower; the petals of them are, for the most part, crenated, the seeds crooked and rough; those which are uppermost long, and those within short: the leaves are long, intire, and, for the most part, succulent. Miller.
Your circle will teach you to draw truly all spherical bodies. The most of flowers; as, the rose and marigold. Peach.
The marigold, whose courtier's face Echoes the sun, and doth unlace Her at his rise. Cleveland.
Fair is the gilliflower, of gardens sweet,
Fair is the marigold, for pottage meet. Gay's Pastoral.
To MARINATE. v. a. [mariner, French.] To salt fish, and then preserve them in oil or vinegar.
Why am I styl'd a cook, if I'm so loath
To marinate my fish, or fœdon broth. King's Cookery.
MARINE. adj. [marinus, Latin.] Belonging to the sea.
The king was delirious that the ordinances of England and France, touching marine affairs, might be reduced into one form. Howard.
Vast multitudes of shells, and other marine bodies, are found lodged in all forts of stone. Woodward.
No longer Circe could her flame disguise,
But to the suppliant God marine replies. Garth's Ovid.
MARINE. n. f. [la marine, French.]
1. Sea-affairs.
Nearchus, who commanded Alexander's fleet, and Onesicritus his intendant-general of marine, have both left relations of the state of the Indies at that time. Arbutnot.
2. A soldier taken on shipboard to be employed in descents upon the land.
MARINER. n. f. [from mare, Latin; marinier, French.] A seaman; a sailor.
The merry mariner unto his word
Soon harkened, and her painted boat freightway Turn'd to the shore. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Your ships are not well mann'd,
Your mariners are muliters, or reapers. Shakespeare.
We oft deceive ourselves, as did that mariner who, mistaking them for precious stones, brought home his ship fraught with common pebbles from the remotest Indies. Glanville's Ship.
His busy mariners he hastes,
His shatter'd sails with rigging to restore. Dryden.
What mariner is not afraid
To venture in a ship decay'd. Swift's Miscel.
MARJORAM. n. f. [marjorana, Lat. marjolaine, Fr.] A fragrant plant of many kinds; the bastard kind only grows here.
The nymphs of the mountains would be drawn upon their heads garlands of honeysuckles, woodbine, and sweet marjoram. Peacham on Drawing.
MARISH. n. f. [marais, French; meyr, Saxon; maersche, Dutch.] A bog; a fen; a swamp; watry ground; a marsh; a morass; a more.
The flight was made towards Dalkeith; which way, by reason of the marsh, the English horse were least able to pursue. Howard.
When they had avenged the blood of their brother, they turned again to the marsh of Jordan. 1 Mac. ix. 42.
Lodronius, carried away with the breaking in of the horsemen, was driven into a marsh, where, after being sore wounded, and fast in the mud, he had done the uttermost. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
His limbs he coucheth in the cooler shades;
Oft, when heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marshes resorts. Sandy's Paraphrase.
From the other hill
To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
The cherubin descended; on the ground
Gliding meteorous, as evening mist
Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides.
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heel. Milton.
MARISH. adj. Morish; fenny; boggy; swampy.
It hath been a great endangering to the health of some plantations, that they have built along the sea and rivers, in marsh and unwholesome grounds. Bacon's Essays.
The fen and quaire for marsh by kind,
Are to be drained. Taffier's Husbandry.
MARITAL. n. f. [maritus, Latin; marital, French.] Pertaining to a husband; incident to a husband.
If any one retains a wife that has been taken in the act of adultery, he hereby incurs the guilt of the crime of bawdry. But because repentance does, for the most part, consist in the mind, and since Christian charity, as well as marital affection, easily induces a belief thereof, this law is not observed. Ayliffe's Parergon.
It has been determined by some unpolite professors of the law, that a husband may exercise his marital authority so far, as to give his wife moderate correction. Art of Tormenting.
MARITATED. adj. [from maritus, Latin.] Having a husband. Diſt.

1. A token by which any thing is known.
Once was proclaimed throughout all Ireland, that all men should mark their cattle with an open several mark upon their flanks or buttocks, so as if they happened to be stolen they might appear whole they were. Spenser on Ireland.
In the present form of the earth there are certain marks and indications of its first state; with which, if we compare those things that are recorded in sacred history, we may discover what the earth was in its first original. Burnet.
The urine is a lixivium of the salts in a human body, and the proper mark of the state and quantity of such salts; and therefore very certain indications for the choice of diet may be taken from the state of urine. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. A token; an impression.
But cruel fate, and my more cruel wife,
To Grecian fowds betray'd my sleeping life:
These are the monuments of Helen's love,
The flame I bear below, the marks I bore above. Dryden.
'Twas then old soldiers cover'd o'er with fears,
The marks of Pyrrhus, or the Punick wars,
Thought all past services rewarded well,
If to their share at least two acres fell. Dryden's Juvenal.
At present there are scarce any marks left of a subterraneous fire; for the earth is cold, and over-run with grass and shrubs. Addison on Italy.
3. A proof; an evidence.
As the confusion of tongues was a mark of separation, so the being of one language is a mark of union. Bacon.
The Argonauts failed up the Danube, and from thence passed into the Adriatick, carrying their ship Argo upon their shoulders; a mark of great ignorance in geography among the writers of that time. Arbutnot on Cæsi.

MARKET. n. f. [anciently written mercato, of mercatus, Lat.]
1. A publick time of buying and selling.
It were good that the privilege of a market were given, the rather to enable them to their defence; for there is nothing doth sooner cause civility than many market towns, by reason the people repairing often thither will learn civil manners. Spenser on Ireland.
Mistress, know yourself, down on your knees,
And thank heav'n, fasting, for a good man's love:
For I must tell you friendly in your ear,
Sell when you can, you are not for all markets. Shakespeare.
They counted our life a pastime, and our time here a market for gain. Wisd. xv. 12.
If one bushel of wheat and two bushels of barley will, in the market, be taken one for another, they are of equal worth. Locke.

—I aim'd so near when I suppos'd you lov'd.
—A right good marksmen. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
Whom nothing can procure;
When the wide world runs bias from his will,
To writhe his limbs, and share, not mend the ill.
This is the markman, safe and sure,
Who still is right, and prays to be so still. Herbert.
An ordinary markman may know certainly when he shoots lefts wide at what he aims. Dryden's Ded. to the Sp. Fryar.
MARL. n. f. [marl, Welsh; mergel, Dutch; marga, Latin; marle, marne, Fr. in Saxon, meys is marrow, with an allusive signification, marl being the fatness of the earth.]
Marl is a kind of clay, which is become fatter, and of a more enriching quality, by a better fermentation, and by its having lain so deep in the earth as not to have spent of weakened its fertilizing quality by any product. Marl is supposed to be much of the nature of chalk, and is believed to be fertile from its salt and oily quality. Quincy.
We understand by the term marl simple native earths, less heavy than the boles or clays, not soft and unctuous to the touch, nor ductile while moist, dry and crumbly between the fingers, and readily diffusable in water. Hill.
Marl is the best compost, as having most fatness, and not heating the ground too much. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 596.

The marriage with his brother's wife
Has crept too near his conscience.

Thy purpose marriage, fend me word to-morrow.

The French king would have the disposing of the marriage of Bretagne, with an exception, that he should not marry her himself.

Some married persons, even in their marriage, do better please God than some virgins in their state of virginity: they, by giving great example of conjugal affection, by preserving their faith unbroken, and by educating children in the fear of God, please God in a higher degree than those virgins whose piety is not answerable to their opportunities.

I propose that Palamon shall be
In marriage join'd with beautiful Emily.

Neither her worthiness, which in truth was great, nor his own suffering for her, which is wont to endear affection, could fether his fickleness; but, before the marriage-day appointed, he had taken to wife Baccha, of whom she complained.

I by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur, claim this land for mine.

There on his arms and once lov'd portrait lay, Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey.

To these whom death again did wed,
This grave's the second marriage-bed:

For though the hand of fate could force
Twice foul and body a divorce,

It could not sever man and wife,
Because they both liv'd but one life.

Give me, to live and die,
A spotless maid, without the marriage-tie.

In a late draught of marriage-articles, a lady stipulated with her husband, that the shall be at liberty to patch on which side she pleases.

Virgin awake! the marriage-hour is nigh.

1. Fit for wedlock; of age to be married.

Every wedding, one with another, produces four children, and consequently that is the proportion of children which any marriageable man or woman may be presumed shall have.

I am the father of a young heiress, whom I begin to look upon as marriageable.

When the girls are twelve years old, which is the marriageable age, their parents take them home.

2. Capable of union.

They led the vine
To wed her elm; she spous'd about him twines
Her marriageable arms, and with her brings Her dowry, th' adopted clusters to adorn
His barren leaves.

MA'RRIED. adj. [from marry.] Conjugal; connubial.

Thus have you shun'd the marry'd state.

MA'RRROW. n. f. [marrow, Saxon; marrow, Fr.; marrow, Scot. tith.]

All the bones of the body which have any considerable thickness have either a large cavity, or they are spongy, and full of little cells: in both the one and the other there is an oleagenous substance, called marrow, contained in proper vessels or membranes, like the fat: in the larger bones this fine oil, by the gentle heat of the body, is exhaled through the pores of its small bladders, and enters some narrow passages, which lead to some fine canals excavated in the substance of the bone, that the marrow may supply the fibres of the bones, and render them less apt to break.

Would he were walled, marrow, bones, and all
That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring.

The skull hath brains as a kind of marrow within it: the back-bone hath one kind of marrow, and other bones of the body hath another: the jaw-bones have no marrow severed, but a little pulp of marrow diffused.

Pamper'd and edify'd their zeal
With marrow puddings many a meal.

He bit the dart, and wrench'd the wood away,
The point still buried in the marrow lay.

MA'RRROW, in the Scottish dialect, to this day, denotes a fellow, companion, or associate; as also equal match, he met with his marrow.

Though buying and selling doth wonderful well,
Yet chopping and changing I cannot commend
With thee of his marrow for fear of it end.

MA'RRON. n. f. [bone and marrow.]

1. Bone boiled for the marrow.

2. In burlesque language, the knees.

Upon this he fell down upon his marrowbones, and begged of Jupiter to give him a pair of horns.

Down on your marrowbones, upon your allegiance; and make an acknowledgement of your offences; for I will have ample satisfaction.

MA'RRON. n. f. [from marrow.] Void of marrow.

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with.

MA'RRY. v. a. [marry, French; mariter, Latin.]

1. To join a man and woman.

What! shall the curate controul me? Tell him, that he shall marry the couple himself.

2. To dispose of in marriage.

When Augustus consulted with Mecenas about the marriage of his daughter Julia, Mecenas took the liberty to tell him, that he must either marry his daughter to Agrippa, or take away his life; there was no third way, he had made him so great.

3. To take for husband or wife.

You'd think it strange if I should marry her.

Go in to thy brother's wife, and marry her.

As a mother shall the meet him, and receive him as a wife married of a virgin.

MA'RRY. v. n. To enter into the conjugal state.

He hath my good will,
And none but he, to marry with Nan Page.

Let them marry to whom they think best.

Virgil concludes with the death of Turnus; for after that difficulty was removed, Æneas might marry, and establish the Trojans.

MA'RRY. } are derived from the Saxon marian, a fenny, or fenny place.

MA'RRY. } place.

MA'RRY. n. f. [marry, Saxon. See MA'RRY.] A fen; a bog; a swamp; a watery tract of land.

In their courses make that round,
In meadows, and in marshes found,
Of them so call'd the fairy ground,
Of which they have the keeping.

Worms, for colour and shape, alter even as the ground out of which they are got; as the marrow worm and the flag worm.

We may see in more conterminous climates great variety in the people thereof; the up-lands in England yield strange finewy, hardy men; the marsh-lands, men of large and high stature.

Your low meadows and marsh-lands you need not lay up till April, except the Spring be very wet, and your marsh very poachy.

MA'RRY. n. f. [from marrow.] It is in all respects like the marrow, but its leaves are generally more soft and woolly.

MA'RRY. n. f. [from marrow.] This flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose, in the middle of which rises the point, which afterward becomes a membranaceous fruit, in which there are several cells, which are, for the most part, bent downwards, collected into little heads, and are full of seeds.

And fet soft hyacinths with iron-blue,
To shade marsh-marigolds of flaming hue.

MA'RRSHAL

MAR

MARSHAL. n. f. [marschal, Fr. marfchalch, low Lat. from marfale, old French; a word compounded of mare, which, in old French, signified a horse, and sale, a sort of servant; one that has the charge of horses.]

MA'RTIALIST. n. f. [from marial.] A warrior; a fighter.

Many brave adventurous spirits fell for love of her; amongst others the high-hearted marialis, who first lost his hands, then one of his chiefest limbs, and lastly his life.

MA'RTINGAL. n. f. [martingale, French.] It is a broad strap made fast to the girths under the belly of a horse, and runs between the two legs to fasten the other end, under the nose-band of the bridle.

MARTINMAS. n. f. [Martin and mas.] The feast of St. Martin; the eleventh of November, commonly corrupted to martmas or martmas.

MARTINMAS. n. f. [from martin.] The feast of St. Martin; the eleventh of November, commonly corrupted to martmas or martmas.

MARTINET. n. f. [martinet, French.] A kind of swallow.

This guest of Summer,
The temple-haunting martlet does approve
By his lov'd mansion, that heaven's breath Smells wooingly here. No jutting frieze, Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle.
Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd
The air is delicate.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain;
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train.

MARTNETS. n. f. They are small lines fastened to the leech of the fail, to bring that part of the leech which is next to the yard-arm close up to the yard, when the fail is to be furled.

MARTYR. n. f. [martyr, French.] One who by his death bears witness to the truth.

Prayers and tears may serve a good man's turn; if not to conquer as a soldier, yet to suffer as a martyr.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenced.

Nearer heav'n his virtues shone more bright,
Like rising flames expanding in their height,
The martyr's glory crown'd the soldier's fight.

7. To be a martyr signifies only to witness the truth of Christ; but the witnessing of the truth was then so generally attended with persecution, that martyrdom now signifies not only to witness, but to witness by death.

8. The first martyr for Christianity was encouraged, in his last moments, by a vision of that divine person for whom he suffered.

M A S

Socrates,
Truth's early champion, martyr for his God. Thomson.
To MARTYR. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To put to death for virtue.
2. To murder; to destroy.
You could not beg for grace.
Hark wretches, how I mean to martyr you:
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats. Shakespeare.
If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd,
Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud. Suckling.
MARTYRDOM. n. f. [from martyr.] The death of a martyr;
the honour of a martyr.
If an infidel should pursue to death an heretick professing Christianity only for Christian profession sake, could we deny unto him the honour of martyrdom? Hooker, b. v.
Now that he hath left no higher degree of earthly honour, he intends to crown their innocence with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon.
Herod, whose unblest
Hand, O! what dares not jealous greatness? tore
A thousand sweet babes from their mother's breast,
The blooms of martyrdom. Craßau.
What mists of providence are these,
So faints; by supernatural pow'r set free,
Are left at last in martyrdom to die. Dryden.
MARTYROLOGY. n. f. [martyrologie, Fr. martyrologium, Lat.]
A register of martyrs.
In the Roman martyrology we find at one time many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian, being met together in a church, rather than escape by offering a little incense at their coming out. Stillingfleet.
MARTYROLOGIST. n. f. [martyrologiste, French.] A writer of martyrology.
MARVEL. n. f. [merveille, French.] A wonder; any thing astonishing. Little in use.
A marvel it were, if a man could epy, in the whole scripture, nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.
I am scarce in breath, my lord.
—No marvel, you have so bestir'd your valour; you courageously rais'd! Shakespeare's King Lear.
No marvel
My lord protector's hawks do towre so well. Shakespeare.
MARVEL of Peru. A flower. Ainsl.
To MARVEL. v. n. [merveille, French.] To wonder; to be astonished. Disused.
You make me marvel. Shakespeare.
Hark, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied. Shakespeare.
—The army marvelled at it. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The countries marvelled at thee for thy songs, proverbs, and parables. Ecclus. xlvii. 17.
MARVELLOUS. adj. [merveilleux, French.]
1. Wonderful; strange; astonishing.
She has a marvellous white hand, I must confess. Shakep.
This is the Lord's doing; it is marvellous in our eyes. Ezra. cxviii. 23.
2. Surpassing credit.
The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope's Pref. to the Iliad.
3. The marvellous is used, in works of criticism, to express any thing exceeding natural power, opposed to the probable.
MARVELLOUSLY. adv. [from marvellous.] Wonderfully;
strangely.
You look not well, feignior Antonio;
You have too much respect upon the world;
They lose it that do buy it with much care.
Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd. Shakespeare.
The encouragement of his two late successes, with which he was marvellously elated. Clarendon, b. viii.
MARVELLOUSNESS. n. f. [from marvellous.] Wonderfulness;
strangeness; astonishingness.
MASCULINE. adj. [masculin, Fr. masculinus, Latin.]
1. Male; not female.
Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long! Shakep.
His long beard noteth the air and fire, the two masculine elements exercising their operation upon nature being the feminine. Peasam on Drawing.
O! why did God,
Creator wife! that people's highest heav'n
With spirits masculine, create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
2. Resembling man; virile; not soft; not effeminate.
You find something bold and masculine in the air and posture of the first figure, which is that of virtue. Addison.
3. [In grammar.] It denotes the gender appropriated to the male kind in any word, though not always expressing sex.
MASCULINELY. adv. [from masculine.] Like a man.
Aurelia tells me, you have done most masculinely,
And play the orator. Benj. Johnson's Catiline.

M A S

MA'SCULINENESS. n. f. [from masculine.] Masculine; male
MASH. n. f. [masche, Dutch.]
1. The space between the threads of a net, commonly written mash.
To defend one's self against the stings of bees, have a net knit with so small mashes, that a bee cannot get through.
2. Any thing mingled or beaten together into an undistinguish-ed or confused body. [from mischen, Dutch, to mix, or mas-cher, French.]
3. A mixture for a horse.
Put half a peck of ground malt into a pale, then put to it as much scalding water as will wet it well; stir it about for half an hour till the water is very sweet, and give it the horse lukewarm: this mash is to be given to a horse after he has taken a purge, to make it work the better; or in the time of great sickness, or after hard labour. Parvies's Dist.
When mares foal, they feed them with mashes, and other moist food. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To MASH. v. a. [mascher, French.]
1. To beat into a confused mass.
The prelude would be intolerable, and they would even mash themselves and all things else apiece. Mort.
To break the claw of a lobster, clap it between the files of the dining-room door: thus you can do it without mashing the meat. Swift's Directions to the Postman.
2. To mix malt and water together in brewing.
What was put in the first mashing-tub draw off, as also that liquor in the second mashing-tub. Mortimer's Husbandry.
MASK. n. f. [masque, French.]
1. A cover to disguise the face; a visor.
Now love pulled off his mask, and shewed his face unto her, and told her plainly that she was his prisoner. Shakep.
Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And throw her fun-expelling mask away;
The air hath flay'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face. Shakespeare.
Could we suppose that a mask represented never to naturally the general humour of a character, it can never suit with the variety of passions that are incident to every single person in the whole course of a play. Addison on Italy.
2. Any pretence or subterfuge.
Too plain thy nakedness of soul epy'd,
Why dost thou strive the conscious shame to hide,
By masks of eloquence, and veils of pride? Prior.
3. A festive entertainment, in which the company is masked.
Will you prepare for this masque to-night. Shakespeare.
4. A revel; a piece of mummery; a wild buffle.
They in the end agreed,
That at a masque and common revelling,
Which was ordain'd, they should perform the deed. Daniel.
This thought might lead me through this world's vain mask.
Content, though blind, had I no other guide. Milton.
5. A dramatic performance, written in a tragick stile without attention to rules or probability.
Thus I have broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets in their pictures, poems, comedies, and masks. Peasam.
To MASK. v. a. [masquer, French.]
1. To disguise with a mask or visor.
What will grow out of such errors as go masked under the cloke of divine authority, impossible it is that ever the wit of man should imagine, till time have brought forth the fruits of them. Hooker.
'Tis not my blood
Wherein thou see'st me masked. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was he;
But being mask'd he was not sure. Shakespeare.
The old Vatican Terence has, at the head of every scene, the figures of all the persons, with their particular disguises; and I saw in the Villa di Mattheo an antique statue masked, which was perhaps designed for Gnatho in the eunuch, for it agrees exactly with the figure he makes in the manuscript. Addison.
2. To cover; to hide.
I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye,
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
As when a piece of wanton lawn,
A thin aerial veil is drawn
O'er beauty's face, seeming to hide,
More sweetly shows the blushing bride:
A soul whose intellectual beams
No mists do mask, no lazy beams. Craßau.
To MASK. v. n.
1. To revel; to play the mummer.
Thy gown? Why, ay; come, taylor, let us see't;
What masking stuff's here! Shakespeare.
Masking habits, and a borrow'd name,
Contrive to hide my plenitude of shame. Prior.
2. To be disguised any way. MA'SKER.

M A S

MA'SKER. n. f. [from mask.] One who revels in a mask; a mummer.
Tell false Edward,
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
To revel it with him and his new bride. Shakespeare.
Let the scenes abound with light, and let the maskers that are to come down from the scene have some motions upon the scene before their coming down. Bacon.
The maskers come late, and I think will stay,
Like fairies, till the cock crow them away. Donne.
MASON. n. f. [maçon, French; machis, low Latin.] A builder with stone.
Many find a reason very wittily before the thing be true; that the materials being left rough, are more manageable in the mason's hand than if they had been smooth. Watson.
A mason that makes a wall meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and places it in his work. More.
MA'ONRY. n. f. [maçonnerie, Fr.] The craft or performance of a mason.
MASQUERADE. n. f. [from masque.]
1. A diversion in which the company is masked.
What guards the purity of melting maids,
In courtly balls, and midnight masquerades,
Safe from the treach'rous friend, and daring spark,
The glance by day, the whisper in the dark. Pope.
2. Disguise.
I was upon the frolic this evening, and came to visit thee in masquerade. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Truth, of all things the plainest and sincerest, is forced to gain admittance to us in disguise, and court us in masquerade.
Fulton on the Chifficks.
To MASQUERADE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To go in disguise.
A freak took an ass in the head, and away he goes into the woods, masquerading up and down in a lion's skin.
L'Estrange's Fables.
2. To assemble in masks.
I find that our art hath not gained much by the happy revival of masquerading among us. Swift.
MASQUERADE. n. f. [from masquerade.] A person in a mask.
The most dangerous sort of cheats are but masqueraders under the vizor of friends. L'Estrange.
MASS. n. f. [masse, Fr. massa, Latin.]
1. A body; a lump; a continuous quantity.
If it were not for these principles the bodies, of the earth, planets, comets, sun, and all things in them, would grow cold and freeze, and become inactive masses. Newton's Opt.
Some passing into their pores, others adhering in lumps or masses to their outskides, so as wholly to cover and involve it in the mass they together constituted. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
2. A large quantity.
Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
He had spent a huge mass of treasure in transporting his army. Davies on Ireland.
3. Bulk; vast body.
The Creator of the world would not have framed so huge a mass of earth but for some reasonable creatures to have their habitation. Abbot's Description of the World.
This army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
He discovered to me the richest mines which the Spaniards have, and from whence all the mass of gold that comes into Spain is drawn. Raleigh's Essays.
4. Congeries; assemblage indistinct.
The whole knowledge of groups, of the lights and shadows, and of those masses which Titian calls a bunch of grapes, is, in the prints of Rubens, exposed clearly to the light. Dryden.
At distance, through an artful glass,
To the mind's eye things well appear;
They lose their forms, and make a mass
Confus'd and black, if brought too near. Prior.
Where flowers grow, the ground at a distance seems covered with them, and we must walk into it before we can distinguish the several weeds that spring up in such a beautiful mass of colours. Addison's Freeholder.
5. Gross body; the general.
Comets have power over the gross and mass of things; but they are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects. Bacon's Essays.
Where'er thou art, he is; th' eternal mind
Acts through all places; is to none confin'd:
Fills ocean, earth, and air, and all above,
And through the universal mass does move. Dryden.
The mass of the people have opened their eyes, and will not be governed by Clodius and Curius at the head of their myrmidons. Swift.
If there is not a sufficient quantity of blood and strength of circulation, it may infect the whole mass of the fluids.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
6. [Missa, Latin.] The service of the Romish church.

M A S

Burnished gold is that manner of gilding which we see in old parchment and mass books, done by monks and priests; who were very expert herein. Peasam on Drawing.
He infers, that then Luther must have been unparitoulably wicked in using masses for fifteen years. Atterbury.
To MASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To celebrate mass.
All their massing furniture almost they took from the law, least having an altar and a priest they should want vestments.
Hooker, b. iv.
To MASS. v. a. [from the noun.] It seems once to have signified to thicken; to strengthen.
They feared the French might, with filling or massing the houle, or else by fortifying, make such a piece as might annoy the haven. Hayward.
MA'SSACRE. n. f. [massacre, French, from mazzare, Italian.]
1. Carnage; slaughter; butchery; indiscriminate destruction.
Of whom such massacre
Make they, but of their brethren, men of men. Milton.
Slaughter grows murder, when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre what was a war. Dryden's Ind. Emp.
2. Murder.
The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
To MA'SSACRE. v. a. [massacrer, French, from the noun.]
To butcher; to slaughter indiscriminately.
I'll find a day to massacre them all. Shakespeare.
And raise their faction, and their family.
Christian religion, now crumbled into factions, may, like dust, be irrecoverably diffipated, if God do not countermeine us, or we recover so much sobriety as to forbear to massacre what we pretend to love. Decay of Piety.
After the miserable slaughter of the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem, they were scattered into all corners, oppressed and detested, and sometimes massacred and extirpated. Atterb.
MASSICOT. n. f. [French.]
Massicot is cerus calcined by a moderate degree of fire; of this there are three sorts, the white, the yellow, and that of a golden colour, their difference arising from the different degrees of fire applied in the operation. White massicot is of a yellowish white, and is that which has received the least calcination; yellow massicot has received more, and gold-coloured massicot still more; all of them should be an impalpable powder, weighty and high-coloured: they are used in painting. Trevoux.
MA'SSINESS. } n. f. [from massy, massive.] Weight; bulk;
MA'SSIVENESS. } ponderousness.
It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision which he served in it, than for the massiness of the dish. Hakewill on Providence.
MA'SSIVE. } adj. [massif, French.] Heavy; weighty; pon-MA'SSY. } derous; bulky; continuous.
If you would hurt,
Your swords are now too massy for your strength,
And will not be uplifted. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Perhaps these few stones and sling, used with invocation of the Lord of Hosts, may countervail the massive armour of the uncircumcised Philistine. Government of the Tongue.
No sideboards then with gilded plate were prest'd,
No sweating slaves with massive dishes dress'd. Dryden.
The more gross and massive parts of the terrestrial globes, the strata of stone, owe their present order to the deluge.
Woodward's Nat. Hist.
If these liquors or glasses were so thick and massy that no light could get through them, I question not but that they would, like all other opaque bodies, appear of one and the same colour in all positions of the eye. Newton's Opticks.
Th' intrepid Theban hears the burbling sky,
Sees yawning rocks in massy fragments fly,
And views astonish'd from the hills afar,
The floods descending, and the wat'ry war. Pope's Statius.
Swift the signal giv'n,
They start away, and sweep the massy mound
That runs around the hill. Thomson's Spring.
MAST. n. f. [mast, mât, French; mæst, Saxon.]
1. The beam or post raised above the vessel, to which the sail is fixed.
Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude
That thou hast perpendicularly fallen. Shakespeare's King Lear.
He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd;
Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the masts,
His vessel moor'd. Dryden's Homer.
2. The fruit of the oak and beech.
The oaks bear masts, the briars scarlet hips:
The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush Lays her full mess before you. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
Trees that bear mast, and nuts, are more lasting than those that bear fruits; as oaks and beeches last longer than apples and pears. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 583.
When sheep fed like men upon acorns, a shepherd drove his flock into a little oak wood, and up he went to shake them down some masts. L'Estrange's Fables.
The

M A S

The breaking down an old frame of government, and erecting a new, seems like the cutting down an old oak and planting a young one: it is true, the grandson may enjoy the shade and the mast, but the planter, besides the pleasure of imagination, has no other benefit.

Temple's Mscel.

As a savage boar,
With forest mast and fatning marshes fed,
When once he fees himself in toils inclos'd,
Whens his tusks.

Dryden's Æn.

Wondering dolphins o'er the palace glide;
On leaves and mast of mighty oaks they brouze,
And their broad fins entangle in the boughs.

Dryden.

MASTED, adj. [from mast.] Furnished with masts.
MA'STER. n. f. [master, Dutch; maître, French; magister, Latin.]

1. One who has servants; opposed to man or servant.

But now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself
Are yours my lord.

Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

Take up thy master.
My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it;

The boy, his clerk, begg'd mine;
And neither man nor master would take aught
But the two rings.

Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

2. A director; a governor.
If thou be made the master of a feast, be among them as one of the rest.

Ecclj. xxxii. 1.

My friend, my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet, and the song.

Pope.

3. Owner; proprietor.
An orator, who had undertaken to make a panegyric on Alexander the Great, and who had employed the strongest figures of his rhetoric in the praise of Bucephalus, would do quite the contrary to that which was expected from him; because it would be believed, that he rather took the horse for his subject than the master.

Dryden's Disfranch.

4. A lord; a ruler.
Wildom and virtue are the proper qualifications in the master of a house.

Guardian, N. 165.

There Cæsar, grac'd with both Minerva's, shone,
Cæsar, the world's great master, and his own.

Pope.

Excuse
The pride of royal blood, that checks my soul:
You know, alas! I was not born to kneel,
To sue for pity, and to own a master.

Philips.

5. Chief; head.
Chief master-gunner am I of this town,
Something I must do to procure me grace.

Shaksp. As you like it.

As a wife master-builder I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon.

1 Cor. iii. 10.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

10. A failor's wife had chequins in her lap;
Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master o' th' Tyger.

Shaksp. Othello.

11. One uncontrolled.
Let ev'ry man be master of his time
Till seven at night.

Shaksp. Macbeth.

12. Great, and increasing; but by sea
He is an absolute master.

Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.

13. A compellation of respect.
Master doctor, you have brought those drugs.

Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.

14. Masters play here, I will content your pains, Something that's brief; and bid, good morrow, general.

Shaksp. Othello.

15. A young gentleman.
If gaming does an aged fire entice,
Then my young master swiftly learns the vice.

Dryden.

16. Master lay with his bedchamber towards the south sun;
mis lodged in a garret, exposed to the north wind.

Arbutn.

17. Where there are little masters and misses in a house, they are great impediments to the diversions of the servants; the only remedy is to bribe them, that they may not tell tales.

Swift's Rules to Servants.

18. One who teaches; a teacher.
Very few men are wise by their own counsel, or learned by their own teaching; for he that was only taught by himself had a fool to his master.

Ben. Jonson's Discovery.

To the Jews join the Egyptians, the first masters of learning.

South's Sermon.

12. A man eminently skilful in practice or science.
The great mocking master mock'd not then,
When he said, 'Truth was buried here below.'

Davies.

13. A man must not only be able to judge of words and style, but he must be a master of them too; he must perfectly understand his author's tongue, and absolutely command his own.

Dryden.

14. He that does not pretend to painting, is not touched at the commendation of a master in that profession.

Collier.

15. No care is taken to improve young men in their own language, that they may thoroughly understand, and be masters of it.

A master-leaver, and a fugitive.

Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.

34. MASTER-SINEW. n. f.
The master-sinew is a large sinew that surrounds the hough, and divides it from the bone by a hollow place, where the wind-galls are usually seated, which is the largest and most visible sinew in a horse's body; this oftentimes is relaxed or restrained.

Farrier's Dict.

35. MASTER-STRING. n. f. Principal string.
He touch'd me
Ev'n on the tend'rest point; the master-string
That makes most harmony or discord to me.
I own the glorious subject fires my breast.

Ross.

36. MASTER-STROKE. n. f. Capital performance.
Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,
Who nature's mazy intricacies trace;
Tell how your search has here eluded been,
How oft amaz'd, and ravish'd you have been,
The conduct, prudence, and stupendous art,
And master-strokes in each mechanic part.

Blackmore.

37. MA'STERLESS. adj. [from master.]
1. Wanting a master or owner.
When all was past took up his forlorn weed,
His silver shield now idle masterless.

Fairy Queen.

How now, Signior Launce? what news with your master-ship?

Shaksp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

5. MA'STER-TEETH. n. f. [master and teeth.] The principal teeth.
Some living creatures have their master-teeth indented one within another like faws; as lions and dogs.

Bacon.

6. MA'STERWORT. n. f. [master, and wort, Saxon.]
The masterwort is a plant with a rose and umbellated flower, consisting of several petals, which are sometimes heart-shaped, and sometimes intire, ranged in a circle, and resting on the empalement; which afterward becomes a fruit, composed of two seeds, which are plain, almost oval, gently streaked and bordered, and generally casting their cover; to these marks must be added, that their leaves are winged, and pretty large: the root is used in medicine.

Miller.

7. Masterwort is raised of seeds, or runners from the roots.

Mortimer's Hubbardry.

8. MASTERY. n. f. [maistrise, French, from master.]
1. Dominion; rule.
If divided by mountains, they will fight for the mastership of the passages of the tops, and for the towns that stand upon the roots.

Raleigh's Essays.

2. Superiority; pre-eminence.
If a man strive for mastership, yet is he not crowned except he thrive lawfully.

2 Tim. ii. 5.

3. This is the safe of those that will try mastership with their superiors, and bite that which is too hard.

L'Estrange.

M A S

M A T

Good men I suppose to live in a state of mortification, under a perpetual conflict with their bodily appetites, and struggling to get the mastership over them.

Atterbury.

3. Skill.
Chief mastership to dissect,
With long and tedious havoock, fabled knights,
In battles feign'd.

4. He could attain to a mastership in all languages, and found the depths of all arts and sciences.

Fillsen's Serm.

5. To give sufficient sweetness, a mastership in the language is required: the poet must have a magazine of words, and have the art to manage his few vowels to the best advantage.

Dryden.

6. Attainment of skill or power.
The learning and mastership of a tongue being unpleasant in itself, should not be cumbered with any other difficulties.

Locke on Education.

7. MA'STRUL. adj. [from mastr.] Abounding in mast, or fruit of oak, beech or chefnut.
Some from seeds inclos'd on earth arise,
For thus the mastrful chefnut mates the skies.

Dryden.

8. MASTICATIO. n. f. [masticatio, Lat.] The act of chewing.
In birds there is no masticatio, or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw, and thence transferred into the gizzard.

Ray on the Creation.

9. Mastication is a necessary preparation of solid aliment, without which there can be no good digestion.

Arbutnot.

10. MASTICATORY. n. f. [masticatoire, French.] A medicine to be chewed only, not swallowed.

As savage bull, whom two fierce mastives bait,
When rancour doth with rage him once engore, Forgets with wary ward them to await,
But with his dreadful horns them drives afore.

Fairy Queen.

6. When rank Theristes opens his mastiff jaws,
We shall hear musicks, wit, and oracle.

Shaksp. As you like it.

7. When we knock at a farmer's door, the first answer shall be his vigilant mastiff.

Mare's Antidote against Atheism.

8. Soon as Ulysses near th' enclosure drew,
With open mouths the furious mastives flew.

Pope's Odyss.

9. Let the mastiffs amuse themselves about a sheep's skin stuffed with hay, provided it will keep them from worrying the flock.

Swift

MAT

He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
And o'er his eye-brows hung his matted hair.
The spleen consisteth of muscular fibres, all matted, as in the skin, but in more open work.
MA'TADORE. n. f. [matador, a murderer, Spanish.] A hand of cards so called from its efficacy against the adverse player.
Now move to war her sable matadores,
In show like leaders of the swarthy Moors.
MATACHIN. n. f. [French.] An old dance.
Who ever saw a matachin dance to imitate fighting: this was a fight that did imitate the matachin; for they being but three that fought, every one had two adversaries striking him who struck the third.
MATCH. n. f. [mèche, French; miccia, Italian; probably from mica, to shine, Latin: surely not, as Skinner conjectures, from the Saxon maca, a companion, because a match is companion to a gun.] Any thing that catches fire; generally a card, rope, or small chip of wood dipped in melted sulphur.
Try them in several bottles matches, and see which of them last longest without flench.
He made use of her trees as of matches to set Druina a fire.
Being willing to try something that would not cherish much fire at once, and would keep fire much longer than a coal, we took a piece of match, such as soldiers use.
2. [From μάχη, a fight, or from maca, Saxon, one equal to another.] A contest; a game; any thing in which there is contest or opposition.
Shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears? Shakespeare.
The goat was mine, by singing fairly won.
A solemn match was made; he lost the prize.
3. [From maca, Saxon.] One equal to another; one able to contest with another.
Government mitigates the inequality of power among particular persons, and makes an innocent man, though of the lowest rank, a match for the mightiest of his fellow-subjects.
The old man has met with his match.
The natural flame that attends vice, makes them zealous to encourage themselves by numbers, and form a party against religion: it is with pride they survey their increasing strength, and begin to think themselves a match for virtue.
4. One that suits or tallies with another.
5. A marriage.
The match
Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities, Beseeming such a wife as your fair daughter. Shakespeare.
Love doth seldom suffer itself to be confined by other matches than those of its own making.
With him she strove to join Lavinia's hand,
But dire portents the purpose of match withstand.
6. One to be married.
She inherited a fair fortune of her own, and was very rich in a personal estate, and was looked upon as the richest match of the West.
To MATCH. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To be equal to.
No settled senses of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
O thou good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? Life will be too short,
And every measure fall me. Shakespeare, King Lear.
2. To shew an equal.
No history or antiquity can match his policies and his conduct.
3. To equal; to oppose.
Eternal might
To match with their inventions they presum'd
So easy, and of his thunder made a scorn. Milton.
What though his heart be great, his actions gallant,
He wants a crown to poise against a crown,
Birth to match birth, and power to balance power. Dryden.
The shepherd's calendar of Spenser is not to be matched in any modern language.
4. To suit; to proportion.
Let poets match their subject to their strength,
And often try what weight they can support.
Mine have been still Match'd with my birth; a younger brother's hopes. Rew.
Employ their wit and humour in chusing and matching of patterns and colours.
5. To marry; to give in marriage.
Great king,
I would not from your love make such a fray,
To match you where I hate. Shakespeare, King Lear.
Thou dost profess thy love, and would'st it show
By matching her, as she would match her foe. Donne.

MAT

Them willingly they would have still retain'd,
And match'd unto the prince.
When a man thinks himself match'd to one who should be a comfort to him, instead thereof he finds in his bosom a beast.
A senator of Rome, while Rome surviv'd,
Would not have match'd his daughter with a king. Addison.
To MATCH. v. n.
1. To be married.
A thing that may luckily fall out to him that hath the blef-sing to match with some heroic-minded lady. Shakespeare.
I hold it a sin to match in my kindred. Shakespeare.
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep.
And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden, Sp. Fryer.
All creatures else are much unworthy thee,
They match'd, and thou alone art left for me. Dryden.
2. To suit; to be proportionate; to tally.
MATCHABLE. adj. [from match.]
1. Suitable; equal; fit to be joined.
Ye, whose high worths surpassing Paragon,
Could not on earth have found one fit for mate,
Ne but in heaven matchable to none,
Why did ye stoop unto so lowly fate? Spenser, Sonnet 66.
2. Correspondent.
Those at land that are not matchable with any upon our shores, are of those very kinds which are found nowhere but in the deepest parts of the sea. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
MATCHLESS. adj. [from match.] Without an equal.
This happy day two lights are seen,
A glorious faint, a matchless queen. Waller.
Much less, in arms, oppose thy matchless force,
When thy sharp spurs shall urge thy foaming horse. Dryden.
MATCHLESSLY. n. f. In a manner not to be equalled.
MATCHLESSNESS. n. f. [from matchless.] State of being without an equal.
MATCHMAKER. n. f. [match and make.]
1. One who contrives marriages.
You came to him to know
If you should carry me, or no;
And would have hir'd him and his imps,
To be your matchmakers and pimps. Hudibras, p. iii.
2. One who makes matches to burn.
MATE. n. f. [maca, Saxon; mats, Dutch.]
1. A husband or wife.
I that am frail flesh and earthly weight,
Unworthy match for such immortal mates,
Myself well wote, and mine unequal fate. Pope.
2. A companion, male or female.
Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Below thy fawning smiles on equal mates!
My competitor
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war. Shakespeare.
You knew me once no mate
For you; there sitting where you durst not soar. Milton.
Damon, behold you breaking purple cloud;
Hear'st thou not hymns and songs divinely loud:
There mounts Anytas, the young cherubs play
About their godlike mate, and sing him on his way. Dryden.
Leave thy bride alone:
Go, leave her with her maiden mates to play
At sports more harmless, till the break of day. Dryden.
3. The male or female of animals.
Part single, or with mate;
Grazes the sea-weed their pasture, and through groves
Of coral stray. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
Pliny tells us, that elephants know no copulation with any other than their own proper mate. Ayliffe's Parergon.
4. One that fails in the same ship.
What vengeance on the passing fleet she pour'd,
The master frighted, and the mates devour'd. Reformers.
5. One that eats at the same table.
The second in subordination; as, the master's mate; the chirurgion's mate.
To MATE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To match; to marry.
Ensample make of him your hapless joy,
And of myself now mated as you see,
Whose prouder vaunts, that proud avenging boy,
Did soon pluck down, and curb'd my liberty. Fairy Queen.
The hind, that would be mated by the lion,
Must die for love. Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.
2. To be equal to.
Some from feeds inclos'd on earth arise,
For thus the matchless chestnut mates the skies. Dryden.
Parnassus is its name; whose forked rife
Mounts through the clouds, and mates the lofty skies:
High on the summit of this dubious cliff,
Deucalion wafting moor'd his little skiff. Dryden.
3. To

MAT

To oppose; to equal.
I'll try way of loyalty and truth,
Dare mate a founder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
4. [Matters, French; mator, Spanish.] To subdue; to confound; to crush.
That is good deceit
Which mates him first, that first intends deceit. Shakespeare.
The great effects that may come of industry and perseverance who knoweth not? For audacity doth almost bind and mate the weaker sort of minds. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
My sense she has mated, and amaz'd my sight. Shakespeare.
Why this is strange; go call the abbess hither;
I think you are all mated, or stark mad. Shakespeare.
MATERIAL. adj. [material, French; materialis, Latin.]
1. Consisting of matter; corporeal; not spiritual.
When we judge, our minds we mirrors make,
And as those glasses which material be,
Forms of material things do only take,
For thoughts or minds in them we cannot see. Davies.
That these trees of life and knowledge were material trees, though figures of the law and the gospel, it is not doubted by the most religious and learned writers. Raleigh.
2. Important; momentous; essential.
We must propose unto all men certain petitions incident, and very material in causes of this nature. Hooker, b. v.
Hold them for Catholics, or heretics, it is not a thing either one way or another, in this present question, material.
Hooker, b. iv.
What part of the world soever we fall into, the ordinary use of this very prayer hath, with equal continuance, accompanied the fame, as one of the principal and most material duties of honour due to Christ. Hooker, b. v.
It may discover some secret meaning and intent therein, very material to the state of that government. Spenser.
The question is not, whether you allow or disallow that book, neither is it material. Whitgift.
He would not stay at your petitions made;
His business more material. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
Neither is this a question of words, but infinitely material in nature. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 98.
I pass the rest, whose ev'ry race and name,
And kinds are less material to my theme. Dryden's Virg.
As for the more material faults of writing, though I see many of them, I want leisure to amend them. Dryden.
I shall, in the account of simple ideas, set down only such as are most material to our present purpose. Locke.
In this material point, the constitution of the English government far exceeds all others. Swift.
MATERIALS. n. f. [this word is scarcely used in the singular; materials, French.] The substance of which any thing is made.
The West-Indians, and many nations of the Africans, finding means and materials, have been taught, by their own necessities, to pass rivers in a boat of one tree. Raleigh.
Intending an accurate enumeration of medical materials, the omission hereof affords some probability it was not used by the ancients. Brown's Vulg. Errors, b. i.
David, who made such rich provision of materials for the building of the temple, because he had dipt his hands in blood, was not permitted to lay a stone in that sacred pile. South.
That lamp in one of the heathen temples the art of man might make of some such material as the stone abettus, which being once enkindled will burn without being consumed. Wilk.
The materials of that building very fortunately ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them. Tillotson.
Simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested to the mind only by sensation and reflection. Locke.
Such a fool was never found,
Who pull'd a palace to the ground,
Only to have the ruins made
Materials for an house decay'd. Swift's Miscel.
MATERIALIST. n. f. [from material.] One who denies spiritual substances.
He was bent upon making Memmius a materialist. Dryden.
MATERIALITY. n. f. [materialité, Fr. from material.] Corpority; material existence; not spirituality.
Considering that corporeity could not agree with this universal subsistent nature, abstracting from all materiality in his ideas, and giving them an actual subsistence in nature, he made them like angels, whose essences were to be the essence, and to give existence to corporeal individuals; and so each idea was embodied in every individual of its species. Digby.
MATERIALLY. adv. [from material.]
1. In the state of matter.
I do not mean, that any thing is separable from a body by fire that was not materially pre-existent in it. Boyle.
2. Not formally.
Though an ill intention is certainly sufficient to spoil and corrupt an act in itself materially good, yet no good intention whatsoever can rectify or infuse a moral goodness into an act otherwise evil. South's Sermons.

MAT

3. Importantly; essentially.
All this concerneth the customs of the Irish very materially;
as well to reform those which are evil, as to confirm and continue those which are good. Spenser on Ireland.
MATERIALNESS. n. f. [from material.] State of being material; importance.
MATERIATE. } adj. [materiatus, Latin.] Consisting of mat-MATERIATED. } ter.
After long enquiry of things immerse in matter, interpose some subject which is immaterial or less material, such as this of sounds, to the end that the intellect may be rectified, and become not partial. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 114.
MATERIA'TION. n. f. [from materia, Lat.] The act of forming matter.
Creation is the production of all things out of nothing; a formation not only of matter but of form, and a materiation even of matter itself. Brewer.
MATERIALLY. adv. [materie, Fr. maternus, Lat.] Motherly; befitting or pertaining to a mother.
The babe had all that infant care beguiles,
And early knew his mother in her smiles:
At his first aptness the maternal love
Those rudiments of reason did improve. Dryden.
MATERNITY. n. f. [maternité, French, from maternus, Lat.]
The character or relation of a mother.
MATELON. n. f. [mattre, to kill, and felon, a thief.] A species of knap-weed growing wild.
MATHEMATICAL. } adj. [mathematicus, Lat.] Considered MATHEMATICK. } according to the doctrine of the mathematicians.
The East and West,
Upon the globe, a mathematic point
Only divides: thus happiness and misery,
And all extremes, are still contiguous. Denham's Sophy.
It is as impossible for an aggregate of finites to comprehend or exhaust one infinite, as it is for the greatest number of mathematick points to amount to, or constitute a body. Boyle.
I suppose all the particles of matter to be situated in an exact and mathematical evenness. Bentley's Sermon.
MATHEMATICALLY. adv. [from mathematick.] According to the laws of the mathematical sciences.
We may be mathematically certain, that the heat of the sun is according to the density of the sun-beams, and is reci-procally proportional to the square of the distance from the body of the sun. Bentley's Sermons.
MATHEMATICIAN. n. f. [mathematicus, Lat. mathematicien,
French.] A man versed in the mathematics.
One of the most eminent mathematicians of the age assured me, that the greatest pleasure he took in reading Virgil was in examining Aeneas's voyage by the map. Addison's Spect.
MATHEMATICKS. n. f. [μαθηματικά.] That science which contemplates whatever is capable of being numbered or measured; and it is either pure or mixt: pure considers abstracted quantity, without any relation to matter; mixt is interwoven with physical considerations. Harris.
The mathematick and the metaphysicks
Fall to them, as you find your stomach serves you. Shak.
See mystery to mathematick fly. Pope.
MATHES. n. f. An herb. Ans.
MATHE'SIS. n. f. [μάθησις.] The doctrine of mathematics.
Mad Mathesis alone was unconfin'd. Pope.
MATIN. adj. [matine, French; matutinus, Latin.] Morning; used in the morning.
Up rose the victor angels, and to arms
The matin trumpet rung. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
I waste the matin lamp in sighs for thee;
Thy image steals between my god and me. Pope.
MATIN. n. f. Morning.
The glow-worm shews the matin to be near,
And gins to pale his uneffectual fire. Shakespeare.
MATINS. n. f. [matines, French.] Morning worship.
The winged choristers began
To chirp their matins.
By the pontifical, no altar is consecrated without reliques;
the vigils are celebrated before them, and the nocturn and matins, for the saints whose the reliques are. Stillingfleet.
That he should raise his mixt crest on high,
And clap his wings, and call his family
To sacred rites; and vex th' ethereal powers
With midnight matins, at uncivil hours. Dryden.
MATRASS. n. f. [matras, French.]
Matrass is the name of a chemical glass vessel made for digestion or distillation, being sometimes bellied, and sometimes rising gradually taper into a conical figure. Quincy.
Protect from violent storms, and the too parching darts of the sun, your pennach'd tulips and ranunculus, covering them with matrasses. Evelyn's Kalendar.

MA'TRICE.

M A T

MA'TRICE. n. f. [matrix, Latin.]

1. The womb; the cavity where the fetus is formed.
If the time required in vivification be of any length, the spirit will exhale before the creature be mature, except it be enclosed in a place where it may have continuance of the heat, and closeness that may keep it from exhaling; and such places are the wombs and matrices of the females. Bacon.
2. A mould; that which gives form to something inclosed.
Stones that carry a resemblance of cockles, were formed in the cavities of shells; and these shells have served as matrices or moulds to them. Woodward.

MA'TRICIDE. n. f. [matricidium, Latin.]

1. Slaughter of a mother.
Nature compensates the death of the father by the matricide and murder of the mother. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
2. [Matricida, Latin; matricide, Fr.] A mother killer. Ans.
TO MATRICULATE. v. a. [from matricula: a matrix, quod ea velut matrice continetur in militum nomina. Ans.] To enter or admit to a membership of the universities of England; to enlist; to enter into any society by setting down the name.
He, after some trial of his manners and learning, thought fit to enter himself of that college, and after to matriculate him in the university. Milton's Life of Sanderfon.

MATRICULATE. n. f. [from the verb.] A man matriculated.
Suffer me, in the name of the matriculates of that famous university, to ask them some plain questions. Arbutnot.

MATRICULATION. n. f. [from matriculate.] The act of matriculating.

A scholar absent from the university for five years, is struck out of the matriculation book; and, upon his coming de novo to the university, ought to be again matriculated. Ayliffe.

MATRIMONIAL. adj. [matrimonial, Fr. from matrimonium, Latin.] Suitable to marriage; pertaining to marriage; conjugal; nuptial; hymeneal.

If he relied upon that title, he could be but a king at curtesy, and have rather a matrimonial than a regal power, the right remaining in his queen. Bacon's Henry VII.

So spake domestick Adam in his care,
And matrimonial love. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
Since I am turn'd the husband, you the wife;
Which, having fairly gain'd, I will resign. Dryden.

MATRIMONIALITY. adv. [from matrimonial.] According to the manner or laws of marriage.

He is so matrimonially wedded unto his church, that he cannot quit the same, even on the score of going unto a religious house. Ayliffe's Paragon.

MATRIMONY. n. f. [matrimonium, Lat.] Marriage; the nuptial state; the contract of man and wife; nuptials.

ME A

MEAN. adj. [uncene, Saxon.]
 1. Wanting dignity; of low rank or birth.
 She was stricken with most obstinate love to a young man but of mean parentage, in her father's court, named Anti-philus; so mean, as that he was but the son of her nurse, and by that means, without other desert, became known of her. Sidney, b. ii.
 This fairest maid of fairer mind;
 By fortune mean, in nature born a queen. Sidney.
 Let pale-fac'd fear keep with the mean-born man,
 And find no harbour in a royal heart. Shakep. Henry VI.
 True hope is swift, and flies with swallow wings;
 Kings it makes gods, and meener creatures, kings. Shak.
 2. Low-minded; base; ungenerous; spiritless.
 The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor,
 More than I know the found of Marcius' tongue
 From every meener man. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Can you imagine I fo mean could prove,
 To save my life by changing of my love? Dryden.
 We fast not to please men, nor to promote any mean, worldly interit. Smalridge's Sermons.
 3. Contemptible; despicable.
 The Roman legions, and great Caesar found
 Our fathers no mean foes. Phillips.
 I have sacrificed much of my own self-love, in preventing not only many mean things from seeing the light, but many which I thought tolerable. Pope.
 4. Low in the degree of any property; low in worth; low in power.
 Some things are good, yet in so mean a degree of goodness, that many are only not disproved nor disallowed of God for them. Hooker, b. ii.
 The lands be not holden of her majesty in chief, but by a mean tenure in fockage, or by knight's service at the most.
Bacon's Office of Alienation.
 By this extortion he suddenly grew from a mean to a mighty estate, inasmuch that his ancient inheritance being not one thousand marks yearly, he became able to depend ten thousand pounds. Davies on Ireland.
 To peaceful Rome new laws ordain;
 Call'd from his mean abode a sceptre to sustain. Dryden.
 5. [Moyen, French.] Middle; moderate; without excess.
 He saw this gentleman, one of the properest and best-graced men that ever I saw, being of middle age and a mean stature. Sidney, b. ii.
 Now read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton on Education.
 6. Intervening; intermediate.
 In the mean while the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. 1 Kings xviii. 45.
 There is French wheat, which is bearded, and requireth the best soil, recompensing the same with a profitable plenty; and not wheat, so termed because it is unbearded, is contented with a meener earth, and contenting with a suitable gain.
Carew on Cornwall.
 MEAN. n. f. [moyen, French.]
 1. Mediocrity; middle rate; medium.
 Our mean securities, and our mere defects Prove our commodities. Shakep. King Lear.
 Temperance with golden square,
 Betwixt them both can measure out a mean. Shakep.
 There is a mean in all things, and a certain measure wherein the good and the beautiful consist, and out of which they never can depart. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 But no authority of gods or men
 Allow of any mean in poeie. Roscommon.
 Against her then her forces prudence joins,
 And to the golden mean herself confines. Denham.
 2. Measure; regulation.
 The rolling sea resounding foet,
 In his big bale them fitly answered,
 And on the rock the waves breaking aloft,
 A solemn mean unto them measured. Fairy Queen.
 3. Interval; interim; mean time.
 But fith this wretched woman overcome,
 Of anguish rather than of crime hath been,
 Reserve her cause to her eternal doom,
 And in the mean vouchsafe her honourable tomb. Fairy Queen.
 4. Instrument; measure; that which is used in order to any end.
 Pamela's noble heart would needs gratefully make known the valiant mean of her safety. Sidney, b. i.
 As long as that which Christians did was good, and no way subject to just reproof, their virtuous conversation was a mean to work the Heathens conversion unto Christ. Hooker.
 It is no excuse unto him who, being drunk, committeth incest, and allegeth that his wits were not his own; in as much as himself might have chosen whether his wits should by that mean have been taken from him. Hooker, b. i.

ME A

He tempering goodly well
 Their contrary dislikes with loved means,
 Did place them all in order, and compell
 To keep themselves within their fondry reigns,
 Together link'd with adamant chains. Spenser.
 I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
 Out of the way, that your converse and business
 May be more free. Shakespeare's Othello.
 No place will please me so, no mean of death,
 As here by Caesar and by you cut off. Shakespeare.
 But nature makes that mean; so over that art
 That nature makes. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
 Your doctrine leads them to look on this end as essential, and on the means as indifferent. Lord Bolingbroke to Swift.
 5. It is often used in the plural, and by some not very grammatically with an adjective singular.
 The more base art thou,
 To make such means for her as thou hast done, Shakespeare.
 By this means he had them the more at vantage, being tired and harrassed with a long march. Bacon's Henry III.
 Because he wanted means to perform any great action, he made means to return the sooner. Davies on Ireland.
 Strong was their plot,
 Their parties great, means good, the season fit,
 Their practice close, their faith suspected not. Daniel.
 By this means not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation will be bred up not perverted by any other hopes. Sprat's Sermons.
 Who is there that hath the leisure and means to collect all the proofs concerning most of the opinions he has, so as safely to conclude that he hath a clear and full view. Locke.
 A good character, when established, should not be rested in as an end, but only employed as a means of doing still farther good. Atterbury's Sermons.
 It renders us careless of approving ourselves to God by religious duties, and, by that means, securing the continuance of his goodness. Atterbury's Sermons.
 6. By all MEANS. Without doubt; without hesitation; without fail.
 7. By no MEANS. Not in any degree; not at all.
 The wine on this side of the lake is by no means so good as that on the other. Addison on Italy.
 8. Means are likewise used for revenue; fortune; probably from defiance.
 Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 Rust sword; cool bluffs; and, parolles, live Safest in flame! being fool'd, by fool'ry thrive;
 There's place and means for every man alive. Shakep.
 For competence of life I will allow you,
 That lack of means enforce you not to evil;
 And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,
 Give you advancement. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 Essex did not build or adorn any house; the queen perchance spending his time, and himself his means. Watson.
 9. MEAN-TIME. } In the intervening time: sometimes an MEAN-WHILE. } adverbial mode of speech.
 The world shall burn, and from her ashes spring
 New heav'n and earth. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.

 And on the shaded ocean rush'd the night. Dryden.
 Mean-time her warlike brother on the seas,
 His waving streamers to the winds displays. Dryden.
 Mean time, in shades of night Æneas lies;
 Care seiz'd his soul, and sleep forsook his eyes. Dryden.
 Mean-while I'll draw up my Numidian troops,
 And, as I see occasion, favour thee. Addison's Cato.
 The Roman legions were all recalled to help their country against the Goths; mean-time the Britons, left to shift for themselves, and daily harrassed by cruel inroads from the Picts, were forced to call in the Saxons for their defence. Swift.
 To MEAN. v. n. [meenen, Dutch.] To have in the mind; to intend; to purpose.
 When your children shall say, What mean you by this fervice? ye shall say, It is the palliover. Exod. xii. 26.
 These delights if thou canst give,
 Mirth, with thee I mean to live. Milton.
 To MEAN. v. a.
 1. To purpose; to intend; to design.
 Ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good,
 to save much people alive. Gen. i. 20.
 And life more perfect have attain'd than fate
 Meant me, by venturing higher than my lot. Milton.
 I practise'd it to make you taste your cheer
 With double pleasure, first prepar'd by fear:
 So loyal subjects often seize their prince,
 Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence. Dryden.

 Whatever was meant by them, it could not be that Cain, as elder, had a natural dominion over Abel. Locke.
 MEANDER. n. f. [Meander is a river in Phrygia remarkable for its winding course.] Maze; labyrinth; flexuous passage; serpentine winding; winding course.
 Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have searched into those various meanders of the veins, arteries, and integrals of the body. Hall's Origin of Mankind.
 'Tis well, that while mankind
 Through fate's perverse meander errs,
 He can imagin'd pleasures find,
 To combat against real cares. Prior.
 While ling'ring rivers in meanders glide,
 They scatter verdant life on either side;
 The vallies smile, and with their flow'ry face,
 And wealthy births confess the floods embrace. Blackmore.
 Law is a bottomless pit: John Bull was flattered by the lawyers, that his suit would not last above a year; yet ten long years did Hocus steer his cause through all the meanders of the law, and all the courts. Arbutnot.
 MEANDROUS. adj. [from meander.] Winding; flexuous.
 MEANING. n. f. [from mean.]
 1. Purpose; intention.
 I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning toward
 you. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 2. Habitual intention.
 Some whose meaning hath at first been fair,
 Grow knaves by use, and rebels by despair. Roscommon.
 3. The sense; the thing understood.
 The meaning, not the name, I call: for thou,
 Not of the Muses nine. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
 These lost the sense their learning to display,
 And those explain'd the meaning quite away. Pope.
 No word more frequently in the mouths of men than conscience; and the meaning of it is, in some measure, understood; however, it is a word extremely abused by many, who apply other meanings to it which God Almighty never intended. Swift's Miscel.
 MEANLY. adv. [from mean.]
 1. Moderately; not in a great degree.
 Dr. Metcalfe, master of St. John's College, a man meanly learned himself, but not meanly affectioned to set forward learning in others. Asham's Schoolmaster.
 In the reign of Domitian, poetry was but meanly cultivated, but painting eminently flourish'd. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 2. Without dignity; poorly.
 It was the winter wild,
 While the heav'n-born child,
 All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies. Milton.
 The Persian state will not endure a king
 So meanly born. Denham's Sophy.
 3. Without greatness of mind; ungenerously.
 Would you meanly thus rely
 On power, you know I must obey. Prior.
 4. Without respect.
 Our kindred, and our very names, seem to have something desirable in them: we cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts's Logick.
 MEANNESS. n. f. [from mean.]
 1. Want of excellence.
 The minister's greatness or meanness of knowledge to do other things, standeth in this place as a stranger, with whom our form of common prayer hath nothing to do. Hooker.
 This figure is of a later date by the meanness of the workmanship. Addison on Italy.
 2. Want of dignity; low rank; poverty.
 No other nymphs have title to mens hearts,
 But as their meanness larger hopes imparts. Waller.
 Poverty, and meanness of condition, expose the wisest to scorn, it being natural for men to place their esteem rather upon things great than good. South's Sermons.
 3. Lowness of mind.
 The name of servants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lowness of condition.
South's Sermons.
 4. Sordidness; niggardliness.
 MEANT, perf. and part. pass. of to mean.
 By Silvia if thy charming self be meant;
 If friendship be thy virgin vows extent:
 O! let me in Aminta's praises join;
 Her's my esteem shall be, my passion thine. Prior.
 MEASE. n. f. [probably a corruption of measure: as, a mease of herrings is five hundred.] Ans.
 MEASLES. n. f. [morbilli, Latin.] Measles are a critical eruption in a fever, well known in the common practice, and bear this name, which is a diminutive of morbus, because it hath been accounted a species of such malignant and pestilential fevers, to which comparatively this is in a much inferior degree. Quincy.

ME A

 My lungs
 Coin words till their decay, against those measles,
 Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek
 The very way to catch them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Before the plague of London, inflammations of the lungs were rife and mortal, as likewise the measles. Arbutnot.
 2. A disease of swine.
 One, when he had an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it, and proclaimed the virtues of it; nothing ever thrived on it, no owner of it ever died in his bed; the swine died of the measles, and the sheep of the rot. B. Johnson's Discovery.
 3. A disease of trees.
 Fruit-bearers are often infected with the measles, by being scorched with the sun. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 MEASLED. adj. [from measles.] Infected with the measles.
 Thou vermin wretched,
 As e'er in measled pork was hatched;
 Thou tail of worship, that dost grow
 On rump of justice as of cow. Hudibras, p. i.
 MEASLY. adj. [from measles.] Scabbed with the measles.
 Last trotted forth the gentle swine,
 To ease her against the flump,
 And dilmally was heard to whine,
 All as she scrubb'd her measly rump. Swift.
 MEASURABLE. adj.
 1. Such as may be measured; such as may admit of computation.
 God's eternal duration is permanent and indivisible, not measurable by time and motion, nor to be computed by number of successive moments. Bentley's Sermons.
 2. Moderate; in small quantity.
 MEASURABLENESS. n. f. [from measurable.] Quality of admitting to be measured.
 MEASURABLY. adv. [from measurable.] Moderately.
 Wine measurably drunk, and in season, bringeth gladness of the heart. Ecclus. xxxi. 28.
 MEASURE. n. f. [mesure, French; mensura, Latin.]
 1. That by which any thing is measured.
 A tailor's news,
 Who stood with shears and measure in his hand,
 Standing on slippers, which his nimble haste
 Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet, Told of many a thousand. Shakep. King John.
 A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. Holder.
 All magnitudes are capable of being measured; but it is the application of one to another which makes actual measures. Holder on Time.
 When Moses speaks of measures, for example, of an ephah, he presumes they knew what measure he meant: that he himself was skilled in weights and measures, arithmetic and geometry, there is no reason to doubt. Arbutnot on Coins.
 2. The rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned.
 God's goodness is the measure of his providence. More.
 I expect, from those that judge by first sight and rash measures, to be thought fond or insolent. Glanville's Scep.
 3. Proportion; quantity settled.
 Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereunto; and to proportion as well excesses as defects are opposite. Hooker.
 I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment; yet it is certain there is such a law. Locke.
 4. A stated quantity; as, a measure of wine.
 Be large in mirth, anon we'll drink a measure
 The table round. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 5. Sufficient quantity.
 I'll never pause again,
 Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
 Or fortune given me measure of revenge. Shakespeare.
 6. Allotment; portion allotted.
 Good Kent, how shall I live and work
 To match thy goodness? life will be too short,
 And ev'ry measure fail me. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 We will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. 2 Cor. x. 13.
 If else thou seek'st
 Ought, not surpassing human measure, say. Milton.
 Our religion sets before us not the example of a stupid stoic, who had, by obstinate principles, hardened himself against all pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example of a man like ourselves. Tillotson's Sermons.
 7. Degree.
 I have laid down, in some measure, the description of the old world. Albion's Description of the World.
 There is a great measure of discretion to be used in the performance of confession, so that you neither omit it when you own

M E A

- own heart may tell you that there is something amiss, nor over-scrupulously pursue it when you are not conscious to yourself of notable failings. Taylor's Guide to a Penitent.
- The rains were but preparatory in some measure, and the violence and consummation of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
8. Proportionate time; musical time.
- Amayllis breathes thy secret pains,
And thy fond heart beats measure to thy strains. Prior.
9. Motion harmonically regulated.
- My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore no dancing, girl, some other sport. Shakespeare.
- As when the stars in their æthereal race,
At length have roll'd around the liquid space,
From the same point of heav'n their course advance,
And move in measures of their former dance. Dryden.
10. A stately dance. This sense is, I believe, obsolete.
- Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly, modest as a measure, full of state and ancientry. Shakespeare.
- Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures. Shakespeare.
11. Moderation; not excess.
- O love, be moderate, allay thy ecstacy;
In measure rein thy joy, scant this excess;
I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
For fear I surfeit. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
- Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure. Isa. vi. 14.
12. Limit; boundary. In the same sense is
- Μέτρον
Τρεῖς ἴριον δεκάδας τριῶναις ὄροις, μέτρον Ἰσχυρῶν Ἡμετέρων Βιολῆς ἰαζυλῆς ἀδύπνου.
Ἀρχαῖαι τῶν οὐρανῶν.
- Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days what it is, that I may know how frail I am. Psal.
13. Any thing adjusted.
- He only lived according to nature, the other by ill customs, and measures taken by other mens eyes and tongues. Taylor's Holy Living.
- Christ reveals to us the measures according to which God will proceed in dispensing his rewards. Snalbridge's Sermons.
14. Syllables metrically numbered; metre.
- I address'd them to a lady, and affected the softness of expression, and the smoothness of measure, rather than the height of thought. Dryden.
- The numbers themselves, though of the heroic measure, should be the smoothest imaginable. Pope.
15. Tune; proportionate notes.
- The joyous nymphs and light-foot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet,
And to the measures of their melodies
Did learn to move their nimble-shifting feet. Spenser.
16. Mean of action; mean to an end.
- His majesty found what wrong measures he had taken in the conferring that trust, and lamented his error. Clarendon.
17. To have hard measure; to be hardly dealt by.
- To MEASURE. v. a. [mesurer, French; mensuro, Latin.]
- Archidamus having received from Philip, after the victory of Cheronea, proud letters, writ back, that if he measured his own shadow he would find it no longer than it was before his victory. Bacon's Apophth.
2. To pass through; to judge of extent by marching over.
- A true devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps. Shakespeare.
- I'll tell thee all my whole device
At the park-gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day. Shakespeare.
- The vessel ploughs the sea,
And measures back with speed her former way. Dryden.
3. To judge of quantity or extent, or greatness.
- Great are thy works, Jehovah; infinite Thy pow'r! What thought can measure thee, or tongue Relate thee? Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
4. To adjust; to proportion.
- To secure a contented spirit, measure your desires by your fortunes, not your fortunes by your desires. Taylor.
- Silver is the instrument as well as measure of commerce; and 'tis by the quantity of silver he gets for any commodity in exchange that he measures the value of the commodity he sells. Locke.
5. To mark out in stated portions.
- What thou seest is that portion of eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning of the world to its consummation. Addison's Spectator.
6. To allot or distribute by measure.

M E C

- With what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again.
- MEASURELESS. adj. [from measure.] Immense; immeasurable.

- MEASUREMENT. n. f. [from measure.] Mensuration; act of measuring.
- MEASURER. n. f. [from measure.] One that measures.
- MEASURING. adj. [from measure.] It is applied to a cast not to be distinguished in its length from another but by measuring.
- When luffy shepherds throw
The bar by turns, and none the rest out-go
So far, but that the best are meat'ring cats,
Their emulation and their pasture lasts. Wallis.
- MEAT. n. f. [met, French.]
1. Flesh to be eaten.
- To his father he sent ten she asses laden with corn, and bread, and meat, for his father by the way. Gen. xlv. 23.
- Carnivore, and birds of prey, are no good meat; but the reason is, rather the choleric nature of those birds than their feeding upon flesh; for pews and ducks feed upon flesh, and yet are good meat. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 859.
- There was a multitude of excites; as, the vestigial macell, a tax upon meat. Arbutnot.
2. Food in general.
- Never words were music to thine ear,
And never meat sweet-favour'd in thy taste,
Unless I spake or car'd. Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors.
- Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God shall destroy both. 1 Cor. vi. 13.
- MEATED. adj. [from meat.] Fed; foddered.
- Strong oxen and horses, wel shod and wel clad, Wel meated and used. Tusser's Hyls.
- MEATHE. n. f. [medd, Welsh, unde mede, meddwi crius sum.] Drink.
- For drink the grape
She crushes, inoffensive must, and meathes
From many a berry. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
- MEAZLING. part. generally called mizzling. See MIZZLE.
- The air feels more moist when the water is in small than in great drops; in meazling and soaking rain, than in great showers. Arbutnot on Air.
- MECHANICAL. adj. [mechanicus, Lat. mechanique, French; from μηχανικὴ.]
1. Mean; servile; of mean occupation.
- Know you not, being mechanical, you ought not walk upon a labouring day, without the sign of your profession? Shakespeare.
- Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue; I will stare him out of his wits; I will hem him with my cudgel. Shakespeare.
- Mechanick slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
- To make a god, a hero, or a king,
Descend to a mechanick dialect. Rasselas.
2. Constructed by the laws of mechanics.
- Many a fair precept in poetry is, like a seeming demonstration in mathematics, very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation. Dryden.
- The main business of natural philosophy, is to argue from phenomena without feigning hypotheses, and to deduce causes from effects till we come to the very first cause, which certainly is not mechanical; and not only to unfold the mechanism of the world, but chiefly to resolve these, and such like questions. Newton's Opticks.
3. Skilled in mechanics.
- MECHANICK. n. f. A manufacturer; a low workman.
- Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
- Again with Rome's mechanicks. Shakespeare.
- A third proves a very heavy philosopher, who possibly would have made a good mechanick, and have done well enough at the useful philosophy of the spade or the anvil. South.
- MECHANICKS. n. f. [mechanica, Latin.]
- Dr. Wallis defines mechanicks to be the geometry of motion, a mathematical science, which shows the effects of powers, or moving forces, so far as they are applied to engines, and demonstrates the laws of motion. Harri.
- The rudiments of geography, with something of mechanicks, may be easily conveyed into the minds of acute young persons. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
- Salmonius was a great proficient in mechanicks, and inventor of a vessel which imitated thunder. Brown.
- MECHANICALLY. adv. [from mechanick.] According to the laws of mechanism.
- They suppose even the common animals that are in being, to have been formed mechanically among the rest. Ray.
- Later philosophers feign hypotheses for explaining all things mechanically, and refer other causes to metaphysics. Newton.

MECHANICALNESS.

M E D

- MECHANICALNESS. n. f. [from mechanick.]
1. Agreeableness to the laws of mechanism.
2. Meanness.
- MECHANICIAN. n. f. [mechanicien, French.] A man professing or studying the construction of machines.
- Some were figured like male, others like female screws, as mechanicians speak. Boyle.
- MECHANISM. n. f. [mechanisme, French.]
1. Action according to mechanic laws.
- After the chyle has passed through the lungs, nature continues her usual mechanism, to convert it into animal substances. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- He acknowledges nothing besides matter and motion; so that all must be performed either by mechanism or accident, either of which is wholly unaccountable. Bentley.
2. Construction of parts depending on each other in any complicated fabric.
- MECHACAN. n. f.
- Mechacan is a large root, twelve or fourteen inches long, and of the thickness of a man's wrist, usually divided into two branches at the bottom: what we see of it is commonly cut transversely into slices for the convenience of drying it: its first introduction into Europe was about two hundred and twenty years ago: it is brought from the province of Mechacan in South America, from whence it has its name: the plant which affords it is a species of bindweed, and its stalks, which are angular, and full of a reinous milky juice, climb upon every thing which stands near them: the root in powder is a gentle and mild purgative. Hill's Mat. Med.
- MECO'NIUM. n. f. [μυκόνιον.]
1. Expressed juice of poppy.
2. The first excrement of children.
- Infants new-born have a meconium, or sort of dark-coloured excrement in the bowels. Arbutnot on Diet.
- ME'DAL. n. f. [medaille, Fr. probably from metallum, Lat.]
1. An ancient coin.
- The Roman medals were their current money: when an action deserved to be recorded on a coin, it was stamped, and issued out of the mint. Addison's Guard. No. 66.
2. A piece stamped in honour of some remarkable performance.
- MEDALLICK. n. f. [from medal.] Pertaining to medals.
- You will never, with all your medallick eloquence, persuade Eugenius, that it is better to have a pocketful of Otho's than of Jacobus's. Addison on ancient Medals.
- MEDALLION. n. f. [medaillon, Fr.] A large antique stamp or medal.
- Medallions, in respect of the other coins, were the same as modern medals in respect of modern money. Addison.
- MEDALLIST. n. f. [medalliste, Fr.] A man skilled or curious in medals.
- In the language of a medallist, you are not to look upon a cabinet of medals as a treasure of money, but of knowledge. Addison on ancient Medals.
- To MEDDLE. v. n. [meddelen, Dutch.]
1. To have to do: in this sense it is always followed by with.
- It is reported that cassia, when gathered, is put into the skins of beasts newly flayed, which breeding worms, they devour the pith and marrow, and so make it hollow; but meddle not with the back, because it is bitter. Bacon.
- With the power of it upon the spirits of men we will only meddle. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 945.
- I have thus far been an upright judge, not meddling with the design nor disposition. Dryden.
2. To interpose; to act in any thing.
- For my part, I'll not meddle nor make any farther. Shakespeare.
- In every turn of state, without meddling on either side, he has always been favourable to merit. Dryden.
- The civil lawyers have pretended to determine concerning the succession of princes; but, by our author's principles, have meddled in a matter that belongs not to them. Locke.
- What hast thou to do to meddle with the affairs of my family? to dispose of my estate, old boy? Arbutnot.
3. To interpose or intervene importunately or officiously.
- Why should'st thou meddle to thy hurt? 2 Kings xiv. 10.

- To ME'DIATE. v. n. [from medius, Latin.]
1. To interpose as an equal friend to both parties; to act indifferently between contending parties; to intercede.
- The corruption of manners in the world, we shall find owing to some mediating schemes that offer to comprehend the different interests of sin and religion. Rogers.
2. To be between two.
- By being crowded, they exclude all other bodies that before mediate between the parts of their body. Digby.
- To ME'DIATE. v. a.
1. To form by mediation.
- The earl made many professions of his desire to interpose, and mediate a good peace between the nations. Clarendon.
- I possess chemists and corpularians of advantages by the confederacy I am mediating between them. Boyle.
2. To limit by something in the middle.
- They styled a double step, that is, the space from the elevation of one foot to the same foot let down again, mediated by a step of the other foot a pace equal to five feet. Holder on Time.
- ME'DIATE. adj. [mediat, French; medius, Latin.]
1. Interposed; intervening.
- Soon the mediate clouds shall be dissell'd;
The sun shall soon be face to face beheld. Prior.
2. Middle; between two extremes.
- Anxious we hover in a mediate state,
Betwixt infinity and nothing. Prior.
2. Acting as a means. Unusual.
- The most important care of a new and vigorous king, was his marriage for mediate establishment of the royal line. Wotton's Life of Buckingham.
- ME'DIATELY. adv. [from mediate.] By a secondary cause; in such a manner that something acts between the first cause and the last effect.
- God worketh all things amongst us mediately by secondary means; the which means of our safety being shipping and sea-forces, are to be esteemed as his gifts, and then only available and beneficial when he vouchsafeth his grace to use them aright. Raleigh's Essay.
- Pestilent contagion is propagated immediately by converting with infected persons, and mediately by pestilent seminaries propagated through the air. Harvey on Consumption.
- MEDIA'TION. n. f. [mediation, French, from medius, Lat.]
1. Interposition; intervention; agency between two parties, practised by a common friend.
- Some nobler token I have kept apart
For Livia and Octavia, to induce Their mediation. Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.
- Noble offices thou may'st effect
Of mediation, after I am dead,
Between his greatness and thy other brethren. Shakespeare.
- The king fought unto them to compose those troubles between him and his subjects; they accordingly interposed their mediation in a round and princely manner. Bacon.
2. Agency; an intervenient power.
- The passions have their residence in the sensitive appetite: for inasmuch as man is a compound of flesh as well as spirit, the soul, during its abode in the body, does all things by the mediation of these passions. South's Sermon.
- It is utterly unconceivable, that inanimate brute matter, without the mediation of some immaterial being, should operate upon other matter without mutual contact. Bentley.
3. Intercession; entreaty for another.
- MEDIA'TOR. n. f. [mediateur, French.]
1. One that intervenes between two parties.
- You had found by experience the trouble of all mens conscience, and for all matters to yourself, as a mediator between them and their sovereign. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

MED

MEDIC. n. f. [medica, Latin.] A plant.
The medic hath a papilionaceous or butterfly flower, out of which empalement rises the pointal, which afterward becomes an intorted pod, sometimes like a ram's horn, in which are lodged kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.
MEDICAL. adj. [medicus, Latin.] Physical; relating to the art of healing; medicinal.
In this work attempts will exceed performances, it being composed by snatches of time, as medical vacation would permit. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
MEDICALLY. adv. [from medical.] Physically; medicinally.
That which promoted this consideration, and medically advanced the same, was the doctrine of Hippocrates. Brown.
MEDICAMENT. n. f. [medicamentum, Latin.]
Any thing used in healing; generally topical applications.
Admonitions, fraternal or paternal, then more publick reprehensions; and, upon the unsuccessfulness of these milder medicaments, the use of that stronger physick, the censure. Hammond's Fundamentals.
A cruel wound was cured by scalding medicaments, after it was putrified; and the violent swelling and bruise of another was taken away by scalding it with milk. Temple's Miscel.
MEDICAMENTAL. adj. [medicamentum, Latin.]
Relating to medicine, internal or topical.
MEDICAMENTALLY. n. f. [from medicamentum.] After the manner of medicine; with the power of medicine.
The substance of gold is invincible by the powerfull action of natural heat; and that not only alimentally in a substantial mutation, but also medicamentally in any corporal conversion. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.
TO MEDICATE. v. a. [medico, Latin.] To tincture or impregnate with any thing medicinal.
The fumes, steams, and fenchens of London, do so medicate and impregnate the air about it, that it becomes capable of little more. Grant's Bill of Mortality.
To this may be ascribed the great effects of medicated waters. Arbutnot on Aliments.
She secured the whiteness of my hand by medicated gloves. Rambler.
MEDICATION. n. f. [from medicate.]
1. The act of tincturing or impregnating with medicinal ingredients.
The watering of the plant with an infusion of the medicine may have more force than the rest, because the medication is oft renewed. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. The use of physick.
He advieth to observe the times of the equinoxes and solstices, and to declare medication ten days before and after. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
MEDICINABLE. adj. [medicinalis, Latin.] Having the power of physick.
Old oil is more clear and hot in medicinal use. Bacon.
Accept a bottle made of a serpentine stone, which gives any wine infused therein for four and twenty hours the taste and operation of the Spaw water, and is very medicinal for the cure of the spleen. Watson.
The jaw-bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are medicinal. Walton's Angler.
MEDICINAL. adj. [medicinalis, Latin.] This word is now commonly pronounced medicinal, with the accent on the second syllable; but more properly, and more agreeably to the best authorities, medicinal.
1. Having the power of healing; having physical virtue.
Come with words as medicinal as true,
Honest as either; to purge him of that humour
That presses him from sleep. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
Thoughts my tormentors arm'd with deadly stings,
Mangle my apprehensive tender parts;
Exasperate, exulcerate and raise
Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb Nor medicinal liquor can alluage. Milton's Agonistes.
The second cause took the swift command,
The medicinal head, the ready hand;
All but eternal doom was conquer'd by their art. Dryden.
2. Belonging to physick.
Learn'd he was in medicinal lore,
For by his side a pouch he wore,

melancholy; fanciful; hypochondriacal; gloomy.
The king found himself in the head of his army, after so many accidents and melancholick perplexities. Clarendon.
If he be mad, or angry, or melancholick, or sprightly, he will paint whatsoever is proportionable to any one. Dryden.
The commentators on old Ari-Stotle, 'tis urg'd, in judgment vary:
They to their own conceits have brought
The image of his general thought:
Just as the melancholick eye
Sees fleets and armies in the sky. Prior.
MELANCHOLY. n. f. [from melancholia, Fr. from μελας and χολη.]
1. A disease, supposed to proceed from a redundancy of black bile; but it is better known to arise from too heavy and too viscid blood: its cure is in evacuation, nervous medicines, and powerful stimuli. Quincy.
2. A kind of madness, in which the mind is always fixed on one object.
I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation;
nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness. Shakespeare. As you like it.
3. A gloomy, penive, discontented temper.
He protested unto them, that he had only been to seek solitary places by an extreme melancholy that had possessed him.
Sidney, b. ii.
All these gifts come from him; and if we murmur here, we may at the next melancholy be troubled that God did not make us angels. Taylor's holy Living.
This melancholy flatters, but unmans you;
What is it else but penury of soul,
A lazy froth, a numbness of the mind? Dryden.
MELANCHOLY. adj. [from melancholia, Fr.]
1. Gloomy; dismal.
Think of all our miseries
But as some melancholy dream, which has awak'd us
To the renewing of our joys. Denham's Sephy.
If in the melancholy shades below,
The flames of friends and lovers cease to glow;
Yet mine shall sacred last, mine undecay'd,
Burn on through death, and animate my shade. Pope.
2. Diseased with melancholy; fanciful; habitually dejected.
How now, sweet Frank; art thou melancholy. Shakespeare.
He observes Lamech more melancholy than usual, and imagines it to be from a suspicion he has of his wife Adah, whom he loved. Locke.
MELICERIS. n. f. [from μελικρις.]
Meliceris is a tumour inclosed in a cystis, and consisting of matter like honey: it gathers without pain, and gives way to pressure, but returns again. If the matter forming it, resembles milk curds, the tumour is called atheroma; if like honey, meliceris; and if composed of fat, or a fleshy substance, steatomata. Sharp's Surgery.
MELILOET. n. f. [from melilot, Fr. melilotus, Latin.] A plant.
The melilot hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empanement arises the pointal, which afterward becomes a naked capsule, that is, not hid in the empanement, as in trefoil, pregnant with one or two roundish seeds: the leaves grow by threes on the foot-stalks, and the flowers are produced in a spike. Miller.
To MELIORATE. v. a. [from melior, Fr. from melior.] To better; to improve.
Grafting meliorates the fruit; for that the nourishment is better prepared in the stock than in the crude earth. Bacon.
But when we graft, or buds inoculate,
Nature by art we nobly meliorate. Denham.
A man ought by no means to think, that he should be able to much as to alter or meliorate the humour of an ungrateful person by any acts of kindness. South's Sermons.
Castration serves to meliorate the flesh of those beasts that suffer it. Graville.
Much labour is requir'd in trees.
Well must the ground be digg'd, and better dress'd,
New soil to make, and meliorate the rest. Dryden's Virg.
MELIORATION. n. f. [from melioration, Fr. from meliorare.] Improvement; act of bettering.
For the melioration of music there is yet much left, in this point of exquisite comforts, to try.
MELIORITY. n. f. [from melior.] State of being better.
Men incline unto them which are softest, and least in their way, in despite of them that hold them hardest to it; so that this colour of meliority and pre-eminence is a sign of weakness. Bacon's Collection of Essays and Exil.

MEL

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernable ends of them, the melody above what was necessary to be, do evince, by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship not of blind mechanism, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Boutley.
To MELL. v. n. [from mell, Fr.] To mix; to meddle.
Obsolete.
With fathers fits not with such things to mell. Spenser.

From female mellow praise he takes degrees. Recommen.
In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a teffy, touchy, pleasant fellow;
Hast thou much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Addison.
To MELLOW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To ripen; to mature; to soften by ripeness; to ripen by age.
Lord Aubrey Vere
Was done to death, and more than so, my father;
Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years. Shakespeare.
The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the feast of majesty. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
On foreign mountains may the sun refine
The grape's soft juice, and mellow it to wine. Addison.
2. To soften.
They plow in the wheat stubble in December; and if the weather prove frosty to mellow it, they do not plow it again till April. Mortimer's Hist.
3. To mature to perfection.
This episode is not only now the most pleasing entertainment of the Enchiridion, but was so accounted in his own age, and before it was mellowed into that reputation which time has given it. Dryden.
To MELLOW. v. n. To be matured; to ripen.
Though no stone tell thee what I was, yet thou
In my grave's inside see'st, what thou art now;
Yet thou'rt not yet so good, till us death lay
To ripe and mellow there, we're stubborn clay. Donne.
MELLOWNESS. n. f. [from mellow.]
1. Maturity of fruits; ripeness; softness by maturity.
My reason can consider greenness, mellowness, sweetness, or coldness, singly, and without relation to any other quality that is painted in me by the same apple. Digby of Badics.
The Spring, like youth, fresh blossoms doth produce,
But Autumn makes them ripe, and fit for use:
So age a mature mellowness doth set
On the green promises of youthful heat. Denham.
2. Maturity; full age.

Melodious murmurs! warbling tune his praise.
And oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears; Dryden.
A music more melodious than the spheres.
MELODIOUSLY. adv. [from melodious.] Musically; harmoniously.
MELODIOUSNESS. n. f. [from melodious.] Harmoniousness;
musicalness.
MELODY. n. f. [from μελωδία.] Music; harmony of found.
The prophet David having singular knowledge not in pœtry alone but in music also, judged them both to be things most necessary for the house of God, left behind him for that purpose a number of divinely indited poems, and was farther the author of adding unto poetry melody in publick prayer, the author of adding unto poetry melody for the raising up of mens hearts, and the sweetening of their affections towards God. Hooker, b. v.
Singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord.
Eph. v. 19.
Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
And huffst with buzzing night flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfume'd chambers of the great,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody. Shakespeare.
Lend me your songs, ye nightingales: Oh pour
The mazy-running soul of melody
Into my varied verse. Thomson's Spring, l. 570.
MELOE. n. f. [from meloe, Fr. melo, Latin.]
1. A plant.
The flower of the melon consists of one leaf, which is of the expanded bell shape, cut into several segments, and exactly like those of the cucumber: some of these flowers are barren, not adhering to the embryo; others are fruitful, growing upon the embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fruit, for the most part of an oval shape, smooth or wrinkled, and divided into three seminal apartments, which seem to be cut into two parts, and contain many oblong seeds. Miller.
2. The fruit.
We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely;
the cucumbers and the melons. Nam. xi. 5.
MELON-THISTLE. n. f. [from melocottus, Latin.]
The whole plant of the melon-thistle hath a singular appearance, is very succulent, and hath many angles, which are beset with sharp thorns. Miller.
To MELT. v. a. [from melto, Saxon.]
1. To dissolve; to make liquid; commonly by heat.
How they would melt me out of my fat drop by drop, and liquor fishermen's boots with me! Shakespeare.
When the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil. Isa. lxiv. 2.
This price, which is given above the value of the silver in our coin, is given only to preserve our coin from being melted down. Locke.
Will a goldsmith give one ounce and a quarter of coined silver for one ounce of bullion, when, by putting it into his melting pot, he can make it bullion? Locke.
The rock's high summit in the temple's shade,
Nor heat could melt, nor beating storm invade. Pope.
If your butter when melted tastes of brass, it is your master's fault, who will not allow you a silver saucepan. Swift.
2. To dissolve; to break in pieces.
To take in pieces this frame of nature, and melt it down into its first principles; and then to observe how the divine wisdom wrought all these things into that beautiful composition; is a kind of joy, which pierceth the mind. Burnet.
3. To soften to love or tenderness.
The mighty master smil'd to see That love was in the next degree:
'Twas but a kindred sound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love. Dryd. Alexander's Feast.
Alas! thy story melts away my soul. Addison's Cato.
4. To waste away.
Thou would'st have plung'd thyself
In general riot, melted down thy youth
In different beds of lust. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
To MELT. v. n.
1. To become liquid; to dissolve; to be made fluid.
Let them melt away as waters which run continually. Psal.
The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;
The violet sweet, but quickly pass the prime;
While lilies hang their heads and soon decay
And whiter snow in minutes melts away. Dryden.
2. To be softened to pity, or any gentle passion; to grow tender, mild, or gentle.
I melt, and am not
Of stronger earth than others. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Albeit, they were flesh villains, bloody dogs,
Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like two children in their death's sad story. Shakespeare.
This said; the mov'd assistants melt in tears. Dryden.
Melting

MEM

- Melting* into tears, the pious man
Deplor'd to sad a sight.
3. To be dissolved; to lose substance.
Whether are they vanish'd?
Into the air: and what seem'd corporal
Melted as breath into the wind. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Beauty is a witch,
Against whose charms faith melteth into blood. Shaksp.
4. To be subdued by affliction.
My soul melteth for heaviness: strengthen thou me. Psal.
MELTER. n. f. [from mel-.] One that melts metals.
Miso and Mopla, like a couple of forewat melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney, b. ii.
This the author attributes to the remissness of the former melters, in not exhausting the ore. Dryden's Physico-Theol.
MELTINGLY. adv. [from melting.] Like something melting.
Zelmane lay upon a bank, with her face bent over Ladon, that her tears falling into the water, one might have thought the began meltingly to be metamorphosed to the running river. Sidney, b. ii.
MELTWEAL. n. f. A kind of fish.
MEMBER. n. f. [from membre, French; membrum, Latin.]
1. A limb; a part appendant to the body.
The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things.
Jam. iii. 5.
2. A part of a discourse or period; a head; a clause.
Where the respondent limits or distinguishes any proposition, the opponent must prove his own proposition according to that member of the distinction in which the respondent denied it. Watson's Improvement of the Mind.
3. Any part of an integral.
In poetry as in architecture, not only the whole but the principal members, and every part of them, should be great.
Addison's Spect. N. 267.
4. One of a community.
My going to demand justice upon the five members, my enemies loaded with obloquies.
Mean as I am, yet have the Muses made Me free, a member of the tuneful trade. Dryden.
Sienna is adorned with many towers of brick, which, in the time of the commonwealth, were erected to such of the members as had done any considerable service to their country.
Addison on Italy.
MEMBRANE. n. f. [from membrana, Fr. membrana, Latin.]
A membrane is a web of several sorts of fibres, interwoven together for the covering and wrapping up some parts: the fibres of the membranes give them an elasticity, whereby they can contract, and closely grasp, the parts they contain, and their nervous fibres give them an exquisite sense, which is the cause of their contraction; they can, therefore, scarcely suffer the sharpness of medicines, and are difficultly united when wounded. Quincy.
The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation,
the dam doth after tear asunder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
They obstacle find none
Of membranes, joints, or limbs, exclusive bars:
Easier than air with air, if spirits embrace,
Total they mix.
The inner membrane that involved the several liquors of the egg remained unbroken. Boyle.
MEMBRANACEOUS. adj. [from membraneus, Fr. from membrana, MEMBRANEUS. Lat.] Consisting of membranes.
Lute-strings, which are made of the membranaceous parts of the guts strongly wreathed, swell so much as to break in wet weather. Boyle.
Great conceits are raised of the involution or membranaceous covering called the filly-how. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Such birds as are carnivorous have no gizzard, or muscu-lous, but a membranaceous stomach; that kind of food being torn into small flakes by the beak, may be easily concocted by a membranaceous stomach. Roy on Creation.
Anodyne substances, which take off contractions of the membranaceous parts, are diuretic. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Birds of prey have membranaceous, not muscular stomachs.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
MEMORANTO. n. f. [Latin.] A memorial notice; a hint to awaken the memory.
Our gracious master, for his learning and piety, is not only a precedent to his own subjects, but to foreign princes; yet he is still but a man, and seasonable memento's may be useful. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Is not the frequent spectacle of other peoples deaths a memento sufficient to make you think of your own? L'Estrange.
MEMOIR. n. f. [from memoire, French.]
1. An account of transactions familiarly written.
Be our great master's future charge
To write his own memoirs, and leave his heirs
High schemes of government and plans of wars. Prior.
2. Hint; notice; account of any thing.

MEM

- There is not in any author a computation of the revenues of the Roman empire, and hardly any memoirs from whence it might be collected. Arbutnot on Catin.
MEMORABLE. adj. [from memorable, Fr. memorabilis, Lat.] Worthy of memory; not to be forgotten.
Nothing I so much delight to recount, as the memorable friendship that grew betwixt the two princes. Sidney.
From this desire, that main desire proceeds,
Which all men have for living fame to gain,
By tombs, by books, by memorable deeds,
For she that this desires doth still remain.
Dares Ulysses for the prize contend,
In fight of what he durst not once defend;
But basely fled that memorable day,
When I from Hector's hands redeem'd the flaming prey.
Dryden's Ovid.
MEMORABLY. adv. [from memorable.] In a manner worthy of memory.
MEMORANDUM. n. f. [Latin.] A note to help the memory.
I resolved to new pave every street within the liberties, and entered a memorandum in my pocket-book accordingly.
Guardian, N. 166.
Nature's fair table-book, our tender souls,
We scrawl all o'er with old and empty rules,
Stale memorandums of the schools. Swift's Miscel.
MEMORIAL. adj. [from memorial, Fr. memorialis, Latin.]
1. Prefervative of memory.
Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
Of thee and me, and sighs, and takes my glove,
And gives memorial dainty kisses to it. Shakespeare.
May I, at the conclusion of a work, which is a kind of monument of Pope's partiality to me, place the following lines as an inscription memorial of it. Broom.
The tomb with many arms and trophies raised;
There high in air memorial of my name
Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.
2. Contained in memory.
The case is the same with the memorial possessions of the greatest part of mankind: a few useful things mixed with many trifles fill up their memories. Watson.
MEMORIAL. n. f.
1. A monument; something to preserve memory.
All churches have had their names; some as memorials of peace, some of wisdom, some in memory of the trinity itself, some of Christ under sundry titles; of the blessed Virgin not a few; many of one apostle, saint, or martyr; many of all.
Hobbs.
A memorial unto Israel, that no stranger offer incense before the Lord. Numb. xvi. 43.
All the laws of this kingdom have some monuments or memorials thereof in writing, yet all of them have not their original in writing; for some of those laws have obtained their force by immemorial usage.
In other parts like deeds decay'd
Memorial, where the might of Gabriel fought. Milton.
Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitting conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation.
Medals are so many monuments configured over to eternity, that may last when all other memorials of the same age are worn out or lost. Addison on ancient Medals.
2. Hint to assist the memory.
He was a prince sad, serious, and full of thoughts and ferret observations, and full of notes and memorials of his own hand touching persons. Bacon's Henry VII.
Memorials written with king Edward's hand shall be the ground of this history. Hayward.
MEMORIALIST. n. f. [from memorial.] One who writes memorials.
I must not omit a memorial setting forth, that the memo-rialist had, with great dispatch, carried a letter from a certain lord to a certain lord. Spectator, N. 629.
MEMORIAL. v. a. [from memoria.] To record; to commit to memory by writing.
They neglect to memorize their conquest of the Indians, especially in those times in which the fame was supposed.
Spenser on Ireland.
Let their names that were bravely lost be rather memorized in the full table of time; for my part, I love no ambitious pains in an eloquent description of miseries. Watson.
MEMORY. n. f. [from memoria, Fr. memoria, Latin.]
1. The power of retaining or recollecting things past; retention; reminiscence; recollection.
Memory is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas which after imprinting have disappeared, or have been laid aside out of sight. Locke.
The memory is perpetually looking back, when we have nothing present to entertain us: it is like those repositories in animals that are filled with stores of food, on which they may ruminant, when their present pasture fails. Addison's Spectator.
2. Exemption

MEN

2. Exemption from oblivion.
That ever-living man of memory, Shaksp. Henry VI.
Henry the Fifth!
3. Time of knowledge.
Thy request think now fulfill'd, that ask'd
How first this world, and face of things, began,
And what, before thy memory, was done. Milton.
4. Memorial; monumental record.
Be better suited;
These weeds are memories of those worse hours:
I pray thee put them off. Shaksp. King Lear.
A swan in memory of Cygnus shines;
The mourning sisters weep in wat'ry ligins. Addison.
5. Reflection; attention. Not in use.
When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and waffle so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
MEN, the plural of man.
Wits live obscurely men know not how; or die obscurely men mark not when. Johnson.
For men, there are to be considered the valour and number: the old observation is not untrue, that the Spaniards valour lieth in the eye of the looker-on; but the English valour lieth about the soldiers heart. Bacon's War with Spain.
He thought fit that the king's affairs should entirely be conducted by the soldiers and men of war. Clarendon, b. viii.
MEN-PLAYER. n. f. [from men and player.] One too careful to please others.
Servants be obedient to them that are your masters: not with eye-service, as men-players; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. Eph. vi. 6.
To MENACE. v. a. [from menace, Fr.] To threaten; to threaten.
Who ever knew the heavens menace so?
Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale?
Who sent you hither? Shakespeare's Richard III.
My master knows not but I am gone hence,
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents. Shakespeare.
From this league
Peep'd harms that menace'd him. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
What thou'd he do? 'Twas death to go away,
And the god menace'd if he dar'd to stay. Dryden's Fables.
MENACE. n. f. [from menace, Fr. from the verb.] Threat.
He that would not believe the menace of God at first, it may be doubted whether, before an ocular example, he believed the curse at last. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
The Trojans view the dusky cloud from far,
And the dark menace of the distant war. Dryden's Æneis.
MENACER. n. f. [from menace, Fr. from menace.] A threatener;
one that threatens.
Hence menacer! nor tempt me into rage:
This roof protects thy rashness. But begone! Philips.
MENAGE. n. f. [French.] A collection of animals.
I saw here the largest menage that I met with any-where.
Addison on Italy.
MENAGOGUE. n. f. [from menage and gogue.] A medicine that promotes the flux of the menses.
To MEND. v. a. [from emendis, Latin.]
1. To repair from breach or decay.
They gave the money to the workmen to repair and mend the house. Chron. xxxiv. 10.
2. To correct; to alter for the better.
The best service they could do to the state, was to mend the lives and manners of the persons who composed it.
You need not despair, by the assistance of his growing reason, to master his timorousness, and mend the weakness of his constitution. Locke on Education.
Though in some lands the grass is but short, yet it mends garden herbs and fruit. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Their opinion of Wood, and his project, is not mended.
Swift.
3. To help; to advance.
Whatever is new is unlooked for; and ever it mends some, and impairs others; and he that is helped takes it for a fortune, and he that is hurt for a wrong. Bacon.
If, to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum flans of the schools, they will thereby very little mend the matter, or help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.
4. To improve; to increase.
Death comes not at call; justice divine
Mends not her slowest pace, for pray'r, or cries. Milton.
When upon the sands the traveller,
Sees the high sea come rolling from afar,
The land grow short, he mends his weary pace,
While death behind him covers all the place.
He saw the monster mend his pace; he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings. Dryden.
To MEND. v. n. To grow better; to advance in any good;
to be changed for the better.

MEN

- Name a new play and he's the poet's friend;
Nay, show'd his faults—but when wou'd poets mend?
Pope's Essay on Criticism.
MENDABLE. adj. [from mend.] Capable of being mended. A low word.
MENDACITY. n. f. [from mendax, Latin.] Falschood.
In this delivery there were additional mendacities; for the commandment forbid not to touch the fruit, and positively said, Ye shall surely die; but they, extenuating, replied, Left ye die. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
MENDER. n. f. [from mend.] One who makes any change for the better.
What trade art thou? A trade that I may use with a safe confidence; a mender of bad foals. Shaksp. Julius Caesar.
MENDICANT. adj. [from mendicans, Latin.] Begging; poor to a state of beggary.
Be not righteous over-much, is applicable to those who,
out of an excess of zeal, practise mortifications, whereby they macerate their bodies; or to those who voluntarily reduce themselves to a poor, and perhaps mendicant, state.
Fiddes's Sermons.
MENDICANT. n. f. [from mendicans, Fr.] A beggar; one of some begging fraternity in the Romish church.
To MENDICATE. v. a. [from mendicare, Lat. mendicare, Fr.] To beg;
to ask alms.
MENDICITY. n. f. [from mendicatus, Lat. mendicitas, Fr.] The life of a beggar.
MENDS for amends.
Let her be as she is: If she be fair, 'tis the better for her;
and if she be not, she has the mends in her own hands. Shak.
MENIAL. adj. [from menio or menio; menio, Saxon, or menio, old French.]
1. Belonging to the retinue, or train of servants.
Two menial dogs before their master press'd;
Thus clad, and guarded thus, he seeks his kingly guest.
Dryden's Æneis.
2. Swift seems not to have known the meaning of this word.
The women attendants perform only the most menial offices. Gulliver's Travels.
MENIAL. n. f. One of the train of servants.
MENINGES. n. f. [from meninx, Gr.] The meninges are the two membranes that envelope the brain, which are called the pia mater and dura mater; the latter being the exterior involucre, is, from its thickness, so denominated. Diet.
The brain being exposed to the air groweth fluid, and is thrust forth by the contraction of the meninges. Wijeman.
MENOLGY. n. f. [from menologion, Gr.] A register of months.
In the Roman martyrology we find, at one time, many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian: the menology faith they were twenty thousand. Stillingfleet.
MENOW. n. f. commonly menow. A fish.
MENSALE. adj. [from mensalis, Lat.] Belonging to the table; transacted at table. A word yet scarcely naturalized.
Conversation either mental or mensal. Clarissa.
MENSTRUAL. adj. [from menstruus, Fr. menstruus, Latin.]
1. Monthly; happening once a month; lasting a month.
She turns all her globe to the sun, by moving in her menstrual orb, and enjoys night and day alternately, one day of her's being equal to about fourteen days and nights of ours.
Bentley's Sermons.
2. Pertaining to a menstruum. [from menstruus, Fr.]
The distills of the menstrual or strong waters hinder the incorporation, as well as those of the metal. Bacon.
MENSTRUOUS. adj. [from menstruus, Lat.] Having the catamenia.
O thou of late belov'd,
Now like a menstrual woman art remov'd. Sandys's Par.
Many, from being women, have proved men at the first point of their menstrual eruptions. Brown.
MENSTRUUM. n. f. [This name probably was derived from some notion of the old chemists about the influence of the moon in the preparation of dissolvents.]
All liquors are called menstrua which are used as dissolvents, or to extract the virtues of ingredients by infusion, decoction.
Inquire what is the proper menstruum to dissolve metal, what will touch upon the one and not upon the other, and what several menstrua will dissolve any metal. Bacon's Physical Rem.
White metalline bodies must be excepted, which, by reason of their excessive density, seem to reflect almost all the light incident on their first superficies, unless by solution in menstrua they be reduced into very small particles, and then they become transparent. Newton's Opticks.
MENSURABILITY. n. f. [from mensurabilis, French.] Capacity of being measured.
MENSURABLE. adj. [from mensura, Latin.] Measurable; that may be measured.
We measure our time by law and not by nature. The solar month is no periodical motion, and not easily measurable, and the months unequal among themselves, and not to be measured by even weeks or days. Holder.

MER

MENSURAL. adj. [from mensura, Latin.] Relating to measure.
TO MENSURATE. v. a. [from mensura, Latin.] To measure; to take the dimension of any thing.
MENSURATION. n. f. [from mensura, Latin.] The act or practice of measuring; result of measuring.
 After giving the mensuration and argumentation of Dr. Cumberland, it would not have been fair to have suppressed those of another prelate.
MENTAL. adj. [mentale, French; mentis, Lat.] Intellectual; existing in the mind.

What a mental power
 This eye shoots forth? How big imagination Moves in this lip? To the dumbness of the gesture
 One might interpret.
 So deep the power of these ingredients pierc'd,
 Ey'd to the inmost seat of mental light,
 That Adam now enforc'd to close his eyes,
 Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd.
 The metaphor of taste would not have been so general, had there not been a very great conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste that affects the palate.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles; for where the ideas are not, there can be no knowledge, no assent, no mental or verbal propositions about them.
 She kindly talk'd, at least three hours,
 Of plattick forms, and mental powers.
 Those inward representations of spirit, thought, love, and hatred, are pure and mental ideas, belonging especially to the mind, and carry nothing of shape or sense in them.

MENTALLY. adv. [from mental.] Intellectually; in the mind; not practically, but in thought or meditation.
 If we consider the heart the first principle of life, and mentally divide it into its constituent parts, we find nothing but what is in any muscle of the body.

MENTION. n. f. [mention, Fr. mention, Latin.] Oral or written expression, or recital of any thing.
 Think on me when it shall be well with thee; and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house.

The Almighty introduces the proposal of his laws rather with the mention of some particular acts of kindness, than by reminding mankind of his severity.
TO MENTION. v. a. [mentioner, Fr. from the noun.] To write or express in words or writing.
 I will mention the loving-kindnesses of the Lord, and the praises of the Lord.

These mentioned by their names were princes in their families.
 The rest of the acts of Jehoshaphat are written in the book of Jehu, who is mentioned in the book of Kings.
 All his transgressions shall not be mentioned.

MERPHITICAL. adj. [merphitis, Lat.] Ill favoured; flinking.
 Merphitical exhalations are poisonous or noxious fumes issuing out of the earth, from what cause soever.

MERCANTANT. n. f. [mercantante, Ital.] This word in Shakespeare seems to signify a foreigner, or foreign trader.
 What is he?

— A mercantant, or else a pedant.
 I know not what but formal in apparel.

MERCANTILE. adj. Trading; commercial.
 The expedition of the Argonauts was partly mercantile, partly military.
 Let him travel and fulfil the duties of the military or mercantile life; let prosperous or adverse fortune call him to the most distant parts of the globe, still let him carry on his knowledge, and the improvement of his soul.

MERCAT. n. f. [mercatus, Latin.] Market; trade.
 With irresistible majesty and authority our Saviour removed the exchange, and drove the mercat out of the temple.

MERCATURE. n. f. [mercatura, Latin.] The practice of buying and selling.
MERCENARINESS. n. f. [from mercenary.] Venality; respect to hire or reward.

To forego the pleasures of sense, and undergo the hardships that attend a holy life, is such a kind of mercenariness, as none but a resigned, believing soul is likely to be guilty of; if fear itself, and even the fear of hell, may be one justifiable motive of mens actions.

MERCENARY. adj. [mercenarius, Fr. mercenarius, Lat.] Vened; hired; sold for money; acting only for hire.
 Many of our princes, woe the while!
 Lie down'd, and foked in mercenary blood.

Divers Almshouses, who served in the garbisons, being merely mercenary, did easily incline to the strongest.
 The appellation of servant imports a mercenary temper, and denotes such an one as makes his reward both the sole motive and measure of his obedience.

MER

I was not for nothing I the crown resign'd;
 I still must own a mercenary mind.

MERCENARY. n. f. [mercenarius, Fr.] A hireling; one retained or serving for pay.
 He a poor mercenary serves for bread;

For all his travel, only cloth'd and fed.
MERCER. n. f. [mercier, French.] One who sells silks.
 The draper and mercer may measure religion as they please, and the weaver may call her upon what loom he please.

MERCERY. n. f. [mercerie, Fr. from mercer.] Trade of mercers; dealing in silks.
 The mercery is gone from out of Lombard-street and Cheapside into Paternoster-row and Fleet-street.

MERCHAND. v. n. [marchander, French.] To traffick by traffick.
 Ferdinand merchanted with France for the restoring Rouffignion and Perpignan, oppignorated to them.

MERCHANDISE. n. f. [marchandise, French.]
 1. Traffick; commerce; trade.
 If a son, that is sent by his father about merchandise, fall into some leud action, his wickedness, by your rule, should be imputed upon his father.

2. Wares; any thing to be bought or sold.
 Fair when her breast, like a rich laden bark
 With precious merchandise, the forth doth lay.

Thou shalt not sell her at all for money; thou shalt not make merchandise of her.
 As for any merchandise you have brought, ye shall have your return in merchandise or in gold.

So active a people will always have money, whilst they can find what merchandise they please to Mexico.
TO MERCHANDISE. v. n. To trade; to traffick; to exercise commerce.

The Phoenicians, of whose exceeding merchandizing we read so much in ancient histories, were Canaanites, whose very name signifies merchants.
MERCHANT. n. f. [marchand, French.] One who trafficks to remote countries.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
 Our merchants goods at Bourdeaux.

The Lord hath given a commandment against the merchant city to destroy the strong holds thereof.
 The most celebrated merchants in the world were situated in the island of Tyre.

MERCHANTLY. adj. [from merchant.] Like a merchant.
MERCHANTLIKE. adj. [from merchant.] Like a merchant.

MERCHANT-MAN. n. f. [merchant and man.] A ship of trade.
 Pirates have fair winds and a calm sea, when the just and peaceful merchant-man hath them.

In the time of Augustus and Tiberius, the southern coasts of Spain sent great fleets of merchant-men to Italy.
MERCHANTABLE. adj. [mercabilis, Lat. from merchant.] Fit to be bought or sold.

Why they placed this invention in the beaver, beside the medical and merchantable commodity of castor, or parts conceived to be bitten away, might be the sagacity of that animal.
MERCIABLE. adj. [from mercy.] This word in Spenser signifies merciful.

Nought but well mought him beight:
 He is so meek, wife, merciable,
 And with his word his work is convenient.

The metals are six in number: 1. gold; 2. silver; 3. copper; 4. tin; 5. iron; and, 6. lead; of which gold is the heaviest, lead the second in weight, then silver, then copper, and iron is the lightest except tin: some have added mercury or quicksilver to the number of metals; but as it wants malleability, the criterion of metals, it is more properly ranked among the semi metals.

Metallurgy is a kind of terrace in their vessels for refining metals, that the melted metal run not out. Moxon.
2. Courage, spirit. In this sense it is more frequently written mettle. See METTLE.

Being glad to find their companions had so much metal, after a long debate the major part carried it. Clarendon.
3. Upon this signification the following ambiguity is founded.

Both kinds of metal he prepar'd,
Either to give blows or to ward;
Courage and steel both of great force,
Prepar'd for better or for worse. Hudibras, p. i.

METALÉTSIS. n. f. [μετάλησις.] A continuation of a trope in one word through a succession of significations. Bailey.

METALLICAL. adj. [from metallum, Lat. metallique, French.] Pertaining to metal; containing metal; consisting of metal.

The antients observing in that material a kind of metallal nature, or subtilty, seem to have resolved it to nobler use; an art now utterly lost. Wotton's Architecture.

The lofty lines abound with endless store
Of mineral treasure, and metallick oar. Blackmore.

METALLIFEROUS. adj. [metallum and fero, Latin.] Producing metals. Diét.

METALLINE. adj. [from metal.]

1. Impregnated with metal.
Metalline waters have virtual cold in them; put therefore wood or clay into limeth's water, and try whether it will not harden. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N.º. 84.

2. Consisting of metal.
Though the quicksilver were brought to a very close and lovely metalline cylinder, not interrupted by interspersed bubbles, yet having caused the air to be again drawn out of the receiver, several little bubbles disclosed themselves. Boyle.

METALLIST. n. f. [from metal; metalliste, Fr.] A worker in metals; or skilled in metals.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for refining metals, that the melted metal run not out; it is made of quick lime and ox blood. Moxon's Mech. Exercit.

METALLOGRAPHY. n. f. [metallum and γραφή.] An account or description of metals. Diét.

METALLURGIST. n. f. [metallum and γυρ.] A worker in metals.

METALLURGY. n. f. [metallum and γυρ.] The art of working metals, or separating them from their ore.

TO METAMORPHOSE. v. a. [metamorphose, Fr. μεταμορφώ.] To change the form or shape of any thing.

Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me;
Made me neglect my studies, lose my time. Shakespeare.

They became degenerate and metamorphos'd like Nebuchadnezzar, who, though he had the face of a man, had the heart of a beast. Davies on Ireland.

The impossibility to conceive so great a prince and favourite to suddenly metamorphos'd into travellers, with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Watson's Buckingham.

From such rude principles our form began;
And earth was metamorphos'd into man. Dryden's Ovid.

METAMORPHOSIS. n. f. [metamorphose, Fr. μεταμορφωσις.] 1. Transformation; change of shape.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the cause of this metamorphosis. Sidney.

Obscene talk is grown so common, that one would think we were fallen into an age of metamorphosis, and that the brutes did not only poetically but really speak. Gov. Tongue.

The fifteenth book is the master-piece of the whole metamorphosis. Dryden.

What! my noble colonel in metamorphosis! On what occasion are you transformed? Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

There are probable machines in epic poems, where the gods are no less actors than the men; but the less credible sorts, such as metamorphosis, are far more rare. Pope's Odyssey.

2. It is applied, by Harvey, to the changes an animal undergoes, both in its formation and growth; and by several to the various shapes some insects in particular pass through, as the silk-worm, and the like. Quincy.

METAPHOR. n. f. [metaphora, Fr. métaphore.] The application of a word to an use to which, in its original import, it cannot be put; as, he bristles his anger; he deadens the sound; the spring awakes the flowers. A metaphor is a simile comprized in a word; the spring putting in action the powers of vegetation, which were torpid in the winter, as the powers of a sleeping animal are excited by awaking him.

MET

The work of tragedy is on the passions, and in a dialogue; both of them abhor strong metaphors, in which the epopea delights. Dryden's Ded. to Virgil's Æneid.

METAPHORICAL. adj. [metaphorique, Fr. from metaphor.] METAPHORICK. adj. Not literal; not according to the primitive meaning of the word; figurative.

The words which were do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use. Hosier.

METAPHRA'SE. n. f. [μετάφρασις.] A mere verbal translation from one language into another.

This translation is not so loose as paraphrase, nor so close as metaphrase. Dryden.

METAPHRA'ST. n. f. [metaphrastes, Fr. μετάφραστής.] A literal translator; one who translates word for word from one language into another.

METAPHYSICAL. adj.

METAPHYSICK. adj. 1. Veried in metaphysicals; relating to metaphysics. 2. In Shakespeare it means supernatural or preternatural.

Hee thee hither,
To chaff with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate, and metaphysical aid, doth seem
To have crown'd thee withal. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

METAPHYSICK. adj. n. f. [metaphysique, Fr. métaphysique.] On-METAPHYSICKS. adj. n. f. [metaphysique, Fr. métaphysique.] The doctrine of the general affections of substances existing.

The mathematicks and the metaphysics,
Fall to them as you find your stomach serves you. Shakespeare.

Call her the metaphysics of her sex,
And say the tortures wits, as quartsans vex Physicians. Clarendon.

If light be caused by intromission, or receiving in, the form of contrary species should be received confusedly together, which how absurd it is, Aristotle shews in his metaphysics.

See physick beg the Stagyrice's defence!
See metaphysick call for aid on sense! Pope's Dunciad.

The topics of ontology or metaphysick, are cause, effect, action, passion, identity, opposition, subject, adjunct, and sign. Watt's Logic.

METAPHYSIS. n. f. [μετάφυσικ.] Transformation; metamorphosis. Diét.

METAPLASM. n. f. [μεταπλασμός.] A figure in rhetoric, wherein words or letters are transposed contrary to their natural order. Diét.

METAPLASM. n. f. [μεταπλασμός.] A figure in rhetoric, wherein words or letters are transposed contrary to their natural order. Diét.

METASTASIS. n. f. [μετάστασις.] Translation or removal. His disease was a dangerous asthma; the cause a metastasis, or translation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey on Consumption.

METATARSAL. adj. [from metatarsus.] Belonging to the metatarsus.

The bones of the toes, and part only of the metatarsal bones, may be carious; in which case cut off only so much of the foot as is disordered. Sharp's Surgery.

METATARSUS. n. f. [μετάταρσος.] The middle of the foot, which is composed of five small bones connected to those of the first part of the foot. Diét.

The conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining the tarsus to the metatarsus. Wifeman's Surgery.

METATHESIS. n. f. [μετάθεσις.] A transposition.

TO METE. v. a. [meteo, Latin.] To measure; to reduce to measure.

I will divide Shechem, and mete the valley of Succoth. Psal.
To measure any distance by a line, apply some known measure wherewith to mete it. Hollar.

Though you many ways pursue
To find their length, you'll never mete the tree,
But thus; take all that space the fun
Mete out, when every daily round is run. Crash.

METEWAND. n. f. [mete and wand.] A staff of a certain length wherewith measures are taken.

METEWAND. n. f. [mete and wand.] A staff of a certain length wherewith measures are taken. A true touchstone, a sure metewand lieth before their eyes. Alchem's Schoolmaster.

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in metewand, weight, or measure. Lev. xix. 35.

TO METEMPSYCHO'SE. v. a. [from metempsychosis.] To transfer from body to body. A word not received.

The souls of usurers after their death, Lucian affirms to be metempsychos'd, or translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain years, for poor men to take their pennyworth out of their bones. Peacham on Blazoning.

METEMPSYCHOSIS. n. f. [μετεμψύχωσις.] The transmigration of souls from body to body.

From the opinion of metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto their human condition, after his death Ophelus the musician became a swan. Brown's Vulgar Errors, l. iii.

METEOR. n. f. [meteora, Fr. météore.] Any bodies in the air or sky that are of a flux and transitory nature. Look'd

MET

Look'd he or red, or pale, or sad, or merrily?
What observation mad'st thou in this case, Shakespeare.

Of his heart's meteor titing in his face?
She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star must rise upon the horizon of Ireland; for there had the like meteor strong influence before. Bacon's Henry VII.

These burning fits but meteors be,
Whose matter in the soon is spent:
Thy beauty, and all parts which are in thee, Donne.

Are an unchangeable firmament.
Then flaming meteors, hung in air, were seen,
And thunders rattled through a fly scene. Dryden's Æn.

Why was I rais'd the meteor of the world,
Hung in the skies, and blazing as I travel'd,
Till all my fires were spent; and then cast downward
To be trod out by Cæsar? Dryden's All for Love.

O poet, thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
Which did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.

METEOROLOGICAL. adj. [from meteorology.] Relating to the doctrine of meteors.

Many others are considerable in meteorological divinity. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii.

Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be new-come guests, or old inhabitants in heaven, or meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Harvel's Vocal Forest.

METEOROLOGIST. n. f. [from meteorology.] A man skilled in meteors, or studious of them.

The meteorologist observe, that amongst the four elements which are the ingredients of all sublunary creatures, there is a notable correspondency. Harvel's Vocal Forest.

METEOROLOGY. n. f. [μετεωρολογία.] The doctrine of meteors.

In animals we deny not a natural meteorology, or innate presentation of wind and weather. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

METEOROUS. adj. [from meteor.] Having the nature of a meteor.

From the o'er hill
To their fix station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteors, as evening mists.
Ris'n from a river. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

METER. n. f. [from meto.] A measurer; as, a coal-meter, a land-meter.

METHEGLIN. n. f. [metheglyn, Welsh, from medd and glyn, glutinac ait Minshew, vel a modigly medicus & llyn potus quia potus medicinalis.] Drink made of honey boiled with water and fermented.

White handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.
—Honey, and milk, and sugar, there is three.
—Nay then two treys; and if you grow so nice,
Metheglin, wort, and malmsley. Shakespeare.

To allay the strength and hardness of the wine,
And with old Beccius new metheglin join. Dryden.

METHINKS, verb impersonal. Ime and thinks. This is imagined to be a Norman corruption, the French being apt to confound me and I; I think; it seems to me; methinks. See MESEEMS, which is more strictly grammatical, though less in use. Methinks was used even by those who used like-wise mefems.

In all ages poets have been had in special reputation, and methinks, not without great cause; for, besides their sweet inventions, and most witty lays, they have always used to set forth the praises of the good and virtuous. Spenser on Ireland.

If he chooseth out some expression which does not vitiate the sense, I suppose he may stretch his chain to such a latitude; but by innovation of thoughts, methinks, he breaks it. Dryd.

There is another circumstance, which, methinks, gives us a very high idea of the nature of the soul, in regard to what passes in dreams, that innumerable multitude and variety of ideas which then arise in her. Addison's Spect. N.º. 487.

METHINKS already I your tears survey,
METHOD. n. f. [methode, Fr. méthode.]

Method, taken in the largest sense, implies the placing of several things, or performing several operations in such an order as is most convenient to attain some end. Watt.

To see wherein the harm which they feel consisteth, the seeds from which it sprang, and the method of curing it, belongeth to a skill the study whereof is full of toil, and the practice beset with difficulties. Hosier, b. v.

If you will jest with me know my aspect,
And fashion your demeanour to my looks,
Or I will beat this method in your conscience. Shakespeare.

It will be in vain to talk to you concerning the method I think best to be observed in schools. Locke on Education.

Notwithstanding a faculty be born with us, there are several methods for cultivating and improving it, and without which it will be very uncertain. Addison's Spect. N.º. 409.

METHODOICAL. adj. [methodique, Fr. from method.] Ranged or proceeding in due or just order.

MET

The observations follow one another without that methodical regularity requisite in a prose author. Addison's Spect.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them where he pleases; to us, perhaps, not without the appearance of irretrievable confusion; but, with respect to his own knowledge, into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers.

Let me appear, great Sir, I pray, Methodical in what I say. Addison's Reframen.

METHODOICALLY. adv. [from methodical.] According to method and order.

All the rules of painting are methodically, concisely, and clearly delivered in this treatise. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To begin methodically, I should enjoin you travel; for absence doth remove the cause, removing the object. Suckling.

TO METRODISE. v. a. [from method.] To regulate; to dispose in order.

Resolv'd his unripe vengeance to defer,
The royal spy retir'd unseen,
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen,
And methodize revenge. Dryden's Boccace.

The man who does not know how to methodize his thoughts, has always a barren superfluity of words; the fruit is lost amidst the exuberance of leaves. Spektator, N.º. 476.

One who brings with him any observations which he has made in his reading of the poets, will find his own reflections methodized and explained, in the works of a good critic. Addison's Spect. N.º. 291.

Those rules of old discover'd, not devis'd,
Are nature still, but nature methodiz'd. Pope.

METHODIST. n. f. [from method.]

1. A physician who practises by theory.

Our warriest physicians, not only chemists but methodists, give it inwardly in several constitutions and distempers. Boyle.

2. One of a new kind of puritans lately arisen, so called from their profession to live by rules and in constant method.

METHOUGHT, the preterite of methinks. See METHINKS and MESEEMS. I thought; it appeared to me. I know not that any author has methought, though it is more grammatical, and deduced analogically from methinks.

Methought, a serpent eat my heart away,
And you fat smiling at his cruel prey. Shakespeare.

By pray'th' th' offended deity c' appeal;
Kneel'd, and before him humbly'd all my heart.
Methought, I saw him placable, and mild,
Bending his ear: perfusion in me grew
That I was heard with favour; peace return'd Home to my breast; and to my memory
His promise, "That thy feed shall bruise our foe." Milt.

In these
I found not what, methought, I wanted still. Milton.

Methought I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs o'erpass, but knew not how. Dryden.

METONYMICAL. adj. [from metonymy.] Put by metonymy for something else.

METONYMICALLY. adv. [from metonymical.] By metonymy; not literally.

The disposition of the coloured body, as that modifies the light, may be called by the name of a colour metonymically, or efficiently; that is, in regard of its turning the light that rebounds from it, or passes through it, into this or that particular colour. Boyle on Colours.

METONYMY. n. f. [metonymie, Fr. métonymie.] A rhetorical figure, by which one word is put for another, as the matter for the material; he died by steel, that is, by a sword.

They differ only as cause and effect, which by a metonymy usual in all sorts of authors, are frequently put one for another. Tillotson.

METOPOSCOPY. n. f. [metoposcopia, Fr. μέτροπος and σκόπη.] The study of physiognomy; the art of knowing the characters of men by the countenance.

METRE. n. f. [metrum, Latin; μέτρον.] Speech confined to a certain number and harmonick disposition of syllables; verse; measure; numbers.

For the metre sake, some words be driven awry which require a straighter placing in plain prose. Alchem's Schoolmaster.

He taught his Romans in much better metre,
To laugh at fools. Pope.

METRICAL. adj. [metricus, Latin; metrique, Fr.] Pertaining to metre or numbers.

METROPOLIS. n. f. [metropolis, Latin; metropole, French; χώρα and πόλις.] The mother city; the chief city of any country or district.

His eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen: or some renown'd metropolis,
With glittering spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milton.

Reduc'd in careful watch Round their metropolis. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

We stopped at Pavia, that was once the metropolis of a kingdom, but at present a poor town. Addison on Italy.

METROPOLITAN.

MEW

METROPOLITAN. n. f. [metropolitanus, Latin.] A bishop of the mother church; an archbishop.
He was promoted to Canterbury upon the death of Dr. Bancroft, that metropolitan, who understood the church excellently, and counteracted men of the greatest parts in learning. Clarendon.
METROPOLITAN. adj. Belonging to a metropolis.
Their patriarch, of a covetous desire to enrich himself, had forbore to institute metropolitan bishops. Raleigh.
METROPOLITICAL. adj. [from metropolis.] Chief or principal of cities.
He fearing the power of the Christians was gone as far as Gratia, the metropolitan city of Syria. Knolles.
METTLE. n. f. [corrupted from mettle, but commonly written so when the metaphorical sense is used.]
1. Spirit; spiritiveness; courage.
What a blunt fellow is this grown to be?
He was quick mettle when he went to school. Shakespeare.
I had rather go with fir priest than fir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
Upon this heaviness of the king's forces, interpreted to be fear and want of mettle, divers resorted to the seditions.
2. Substance: this at least should be mettle.
Oh thou! whose proud child, arrogant man, is puffed, Engenders the black toad, and adder blue. Shakespeare.
METTLED. adj. [from mettle.] Spiritely; courageous; full of ardour; full of fire.
Such a light and mettled dance Saw you never. Benj. Johnson.
Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison.
METTLESOME. adj. [from mettle.] Spiritely; lively; gay; brisk; airy; fiery; courageous.
Their force differs from true spirit, as much as a vicious from a mettlesome horse. Fatler, N° 61.
METTLESOMELY. adv. [from mettlesome.] With spiritiveness.
MEW. n. f. [mue, French.]
1. A cage; an inclosure; a place where any thing is confined.
Forth-coming from her darkness mew,
Where the all day did hide her hated mew. Fairy Queen.
There then the does transform to monstrous hues,
And horribly mis-shapes with ugly fights,
Captiv'd eternally in iron mewes,
And darkness dens, where Titan his face never shews.
Her lofty hand would of itself refuse
To touch the dainty needle or nice thread;
She hated chambers, closets, secret mewes,
And in broad fields prefer'd her maidenhead. Fairfax.
2. [Mep, Saxon.] A sea-fowl.
Among the first sort we reckon coots, fanderlings, and mewes.
The vessel sticks, and shews her open'd side,
And on her shatter'd mast the mewes in triumph ride. Dryd.
TO MEW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To shut up; to confine; to imprison; to inclose.
He in dark corners mew'd,
Mutter'd of matters as their books them shew'd. Hubbard.
Unto the bush her eye did sudden glance,
In which vain Braggadocio was mew'd,
And saw it stir. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Why should your fears, which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong, then move you to mew up Your tender kinsman. Shakespeare. King John.
Fair Hernia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun;
For aye to be in shoddy cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold, fruitless moon. Shakespeare.
More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakespeare.
Feign them sick,
Close mew'd in their sedans, for fear of air. Dryden's Jew.
It is not possible to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it, unless you will all his life mew him up in a closet, and never let him go into company. Locke.
2. To shed the feathers. It is, I believe, used in this sense, because birds are, by close confinement, brought to shed their feathers.
I should discourse of hawks, and then treat of their syries, mewings, cutting, and renovation of their feathers. Walton.

MIC

The sun hath mew'd his beams from off his lamp,
And majesty defac'd the royal stamp. Cleaveland.
Nine times the moon had mew'd her horns, at length
With travel weary, unsuppl'd with strength,
And with the burden of her womb oppress'd,
Sabeen fields afford her needful rest. Dryden.
3. [Miauler, French.] To cry as a cat.
Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew, the dog will have his day. Shakespeare.
They are not improvable beyond their own genius: a dog will never learn to mew, nor a cat to bark. Grew's Conf.
TO MEWL. v. n. [miauler, French.] To squall as a child.
The infant
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms. Shakespeare.
MEZEZEON. n. f. A species of spurge laurel.
Mezezeon is common in our gardens, and on the Alps and Pyrenean mountains: every part of this shrub is acrid and pungent, and inflames the mouth and throat. Hill.
MEZZOINTO. n. f. [Italian.] A kind of graving, so named as nearly resembling paint, the word importing half-painted; it is done by beating the whole into asperity with a hammer, and then rubbing it down with a stone to the resemblance intended.
MEYNT. adv. Mingled. Obsolete.
The salt Medway, that trickling streams
Adown the dales of Kent,
Till with the elder brother Thames
His brackish waves be meynt. Spenser's Pastoral.
MICASM. n. f. [from micra, iniquo, to infect.] Such particles or atoms as are supposed to arise from disordered, putrefying, or poisonous bodies, and to affect people at a distance.
The plague is a malignant fever, caused through pestilential miasms insinuating into the humoral and consistent parts of the body. Harvey on Consumption.
MICE. the plural of mouse.
Mice that mar the land. 1 Sam. vi. 5.
MICHAELMAS. n. f. [Michael and mase.] The feast of the archangel Michael, celebrated on the twenty-ninth of September.
They compounded to furnish ten oxen after Michaelmas for thirty pounds price.
TO MICHE. v. n. To be secret or covered; to lie hid.
Marry this is micheing malice; it means mischief. Shakespeare.
MICHER. n. f. [from miche.] A lazy loiterer, who skulks about in corners and by-places, and keeps out of fight; a hedge-creeper.
Miche or Mick is still retained in the cant language for an indolent, lazy fellow.
How tenderly her tender hands between
In ivory cage she did the micheer bind. Sidney.
Shall the blessed fun of heav'n prove a micheer, and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked. Shakespeare's Henry IV, p. i.
MICKLE. adj. [micele, Saxon.] Much; great. Obsolete. In Scotland it is pronounced muckle.
This reade is rife that oftentime
Great cumber fall unsift:
In humble dales is footing fast,
The trode is not so tickle,
And though one fall through heedless haste,
Yet is his misf not mickle. Spenser's Pastoral.
Many a little makes a mickle. Camden's Remains.
If I to-day die with Frenchmens rage,
To-morrow I shall die with mickle age. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
O, mickle is the pow'rful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities. Shakespeare.
All this tract that fronts the falling sun,
A noble peer, of mickle trust and power,
Has in his charge. Milton.
MICROCOSM. n. f. [micro and cosmos.] The little world. Man is so called as being imagined, by some fanciful philosophers, to have in him something analogous to the four elements.
You see this in the map of my microcosm. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
She to whom this world must itself refer,
As suburbs, or the microcosm of her;
She, she is dead; she's dead, when thou know'st this,
Thou know'st how lame a creeper this world is. Donne.
As in this our microcosm, the heart
Heat, spirit, motions gives to every part:
So Rome's victorious influence did disperse
All her own virtues through the universe. Denham.
Philosophers say, that man is a microcosm, or little world, resembling in miniature every part of the great; and the body natural may be compared to the body politic. Swift.
MICROGRAPHY. n. f. [micro and grapho.] The description of the parts of such very small objects as are discernible only with a microscope.
The

MID

The honey-bag is the stomach, which they always fill to satisfy and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter: a curious description and figure of the sting see in Mr. Hook's micrograph. Grew's Museum.
MICROSCOPE. n. f. [micro and scopos; microscope, Fr.] An optick instrument, contrived various ways to give to the eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwise be seen.
If the eye were so acute as to rival the finest microscope, and to discern the smallest hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curse, and not a blessing to us; it would make all things appear rugged and deformed; the most finely polished crystal would be uneven and rough; the sight of our own selves would affright us; the smoothest skin would be beset all over with ragged scales and bristly hairs.
The crick eye, that microscope of wit,
Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit. Dunciad, b. iv.
MICROMETER. n. f. [micro and metron; micrometre, French.] An instrument contrived to measure small spaces.
MICROSCOPICAL. n. f. [from microscope.]
MICROSCOPICK. n. f. [from microscope.]
1. Made by a microscope.
Make microscopical observations of the figure and bulk of the constituent parts of all fluids. Arbutnot and Pope.
2. Affixed by a microscope.
Evading even the microscope eye!
Full nature swarms with life. Thomson's Summer.
3. Referring to a microscope.
Why has not man a microscopick eye?
For this plain reason, Man is not a fly.
Say what the use, were finer opticks given,
T'inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n? Pope.
MID. adj. [contracted from middle, or derived from mid, Dutch.]
1. Middle; equally between two extremes.
No more the mounting larks, while Daphne sings, Shall, lighting in mid air, suspend their wings. Pope.
Ere the mid hour of night, from tent to tent,
Unwear'd, through th' numerous host he past. Rowe.
2. It is much used in composition.
MID-COURSE. n. f. [mid and course.] Middle of the way.
Darkness ere day's mid-course? and morning light,
More orient in our western cloud, that draws
O'er the blue firmament a radiant white. Milton.
MID-DAY. n. f. [mid and day.] Noon; meridian.
Who shoots at the mid-day sun, though he be sure he shall never hit the mark, yet as sure he is he shall shoot higher than he who aims but at a bush. Sidney, b. ii.
His sparkling eyes, replete with awful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than mid-day fun fierce bent against their faces. Shakespeare.
Who have before, or shall write after thee,
Their works, though roughly labour'd, will be Like infancy or age to man's firm stay,
Or early or late twilights to mid-day. Donne.
Did he not lead you through the mid-day sun,
And clouds of dust? Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats? Addison.

He had fifty attendants, young men all, in white fatten, loose coats to the midleg, and stockings of white silk. Bacon.
MIDMOST. adj. [from mid, or contracted from middlemost; this is one of the words which have not a comparative, though they seem to have a superlative degree.] The middle.
Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midstst battles halting up behind. Dryden.
Hear himself repine
At fate's unequal laws; and at the clue,
Which, merciless in length, the midstst sifter drew. Dry.
What dulceness dropt among her sons impress'd,
Like motion, from one circle to the rest:
So from the midstst the nutation spreads
Round, and more round o'er all the sea of heads. Pope.
MIDNIGHT. n. f. [mid and night.] Milton seems to have accented this last syllable. The noon of night; the depth of night; twelve at night.
To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; so that to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes.
How now, you secret, black and midnight hags?
What is't you do?
I hope my midnight studies, to make our countries flourish in mysterious and beneficent arts, have not ungratefully affected your intellects. Bacon.
By night he fled, and at midnight returned From compassing the earth; cautious of day. Milton.
After this time came on the midnight of the church, wherein the very names of the councils were forgotten, and men did only dream of what had past.
Some solitary cloister will I chuse,
Coarse my attire, and short shall be my sleep,
Broke by the melancholy midnight bell. Dryden's Sp. Fryar.
In all that dark midnight of popery there were still some gleams of light, some witnesses that arose to give testimony to the truth. Atterbury.
They can tell precisely what altitude the dog-star had at midnight or midnoon in Rome when Julius Caesar was slain. Watts's Logick.
MIDRIFT. n. f. [mid and rift, Saxon.] The diaphragm.
The midriff divides the trunk of the body into two cavities, the thorax and abdomen; it is composed of two muscles; the

the first and superior of these arises from the sternum, and the ends of the last ribs on each side: its fibres, from this semicircular origination, tend towards their centre, and terminate in a tendon or aponeurosis, which hath always been taken for the nervous part of the midriff. The second and inferior muscle comes from the vertebrae of the loins by two productions, of which that on the right side comes from the first, second, and third vertebrae of the loins; that on the left side is somewhat shorter; and both these productions join and make the lower part of the midriff, which joins its tendons with the tendon of the other, so as that they make but one membrane, or rather partition.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff with a stone
That beat out life.

In the gullet, where it perforateth the midriff, the carnosus fibres of that muscular part are inflected.

Our Tyrrhene Pharos, that the mid-sea meets
With its embrace, and leaves the land behind.

Midshipman. n. f. [from mid, ship, and man.] Dryden.

Midshipmen are officers aboard a ship, whose station, when they are on duty, is some on the quarter-deck, others on the poop, &c. Their business is to mind the braces, to look out, and to give about the word of command from the captain and other superior officers: they also assist on all occasions, both in sailing the ship, and in storing and rummaging the hold. They are usually young gentlemen, who having served their time as volunteers, are now upon their preferment.

Midst. n. f. Middle.

All is well when nothing pleases but God, being thankful in the midst of his afflictions.

Arise, ye subtle spirits, that can spy
When love is enter'd in a female's eye;
You that can read it in the midst of doubt,
And in the midst of frowns can find it out.

Midst. adj. [contracted from middlest, the superlative of mid.] Dryden.

Midmost; being in the middle.

On earth join all ye creatures to extol
Him first, Him last, Him midst, and without end.

In the Slighted Maid, there is nothing in the first act but what might have been said or done in the fifth; nor any thing in the midst which might not have been placed in the beginning.

Midstream. n. f. [from mid and stream.] Middle of the stream.

The midstream of his; I creeping by the side,
And shoulder'd off by his impetuous tide.

Midsummer. n. f. [from mid and summer.] The summer solstice, popularly reckoned to fall on June the twenty-fourth.

However orthodox my sentiments relating to publick affairs may be while I am now writing, they may become criminal enough to bring me into trouble before Midsummer.

At eve last Midsummer no sleep I fought.

Midway. n. f. [from mid and way.] The part of the way equally distant from the beginning and end.

No midway 'twixt these extremes at all.

He were an excellent man that were made in the midway between him and Benedick; the one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling.

Pity and shame! that they, who to live well
Stood so fair, should turn aside to tread
Paths indirect, or in the midway faint!

The hare laid himself down about midway, and took a nap; for I can fetch up the tortoise when I please.

How didst thou arrive at this place of darkness, when so many rivers of the ocean lie in the midway.

Midway. adj. Middle between two places.

And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low!
The crows and choughs that wing the midway air,
Shew scarce so gross as beetles.

Midway. adv. In the middle of the passage.

With dry eyes, and with an open look,
She met his glance midway.

Midwife. n. f. [This is derived, both by Skinner and Junius, from mid or med, a reward, and pu, Saxon.] A woman who assists women in childbirth.

When man doth die, our body, as the womb,
And as a midwife, death directs it home.

Without a midwife these their throws sustain,
And bowing, bring their issue forth with pain.

There saw I how the secret felon wrought,
And treason lab'ring in the traitor's thought,
And midwife time the ripen'd plot to murder brought.

I had as clear a notion of the relation of brothers between them, as if I had all the skill of a midwife.

MIG

But no man, sure! e'er left his house
And fadd'd ball with thoughts so wild,
To bring a midwife to his spouse,
Before he knew she was with child.

Midwinter. n. f. [from mid and winter.] The winter solstice.

1. Assistance given at childbirth.

2. Act of production; help to production; co-operation in production.

3. Trade of a midwife.

So hasty fruits, and too ambitious flow'rs,
Scorning the midwinter of rip'ning show'rs,
In spite of frosts, spring from th' unwilling earth.

There was never any thing propounded for publick good, that did not meet with opposition; arising from the humour of such as would have nothing brought into the world but by their own midwinter.

Trade of a midwife.

Midwinter. n. f. [from mid and winter.] The winter solstice.

Begin when the flow waggoner descends,
Nor cease your sowing till Midwinter ends.

Mien. n. f. [from mine, French.] Air; look; manner.

In her alone that owns this book is seen Clorinda's spirit, and her lofty mien.

What can have more the figure and mien of a ruin than craggs, rocks, and cliffs.

One, in whom an outward mien appears,
And turn superior to the vulgar herd.

What winning graces, what majestic mien,
She moves a goddess, and the looks a queen.

Might, the pretense of may.

Matters of such consequence should be in plain words, as little liable as might be to doubt.

Might. n. f. [from might, Saxon.] Power; strength; force.

But wanting rest, will also want of might.
Quoth she, great grief will not be told,
And can more easily be thought than said;
Right so, quoth he, but he that never would,
Could never; will to might gives greatest aid.

An oath of mickle might.

Wherefore should not strength and might
There fail, where virtue fails.

With might and main they chae'd the murderous fox,
With brazen trumpets and inflated box.

This privilege the clergy in England formerly contended for with all might and main.

Mightily. adv. [from might.] Powerfully; forcibly.

1. With great power; powerfully; efficaciously; forcibly.

With whom ordinary means will prevail, surely the power of the word of God, even without the help of interpreters, in God's church worketh mightily, not unto their confirmation alone which are converted, but also to their conversion which are not.

2. Vehemently; vigorously; violently.

Do as adversaries do in law, strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends.

3. In a great degree; very much. This is a sense scarcely to be admitted but in low language.

Therein thou wrong'st thy children mightily.
There's nether a one of you but trusts a knave.

That mightily deceives you.

An ass and an ape conferring grievances: the ass complain'd mightily for want of horns, and the ape for want of a tail.

These happening nearer home made so lasting impressions upon their minds, that the tradition of the old deluge was mightily obscured, and the circumstances of it interwoven and confounded with those of these later deluges.

I was mightily pleas'd with a story applicable to this piece of philosophy.

Mightiness. n. f. [from might.] Power; greatness; height of dignity.

Think you see them great,
And follow'd with gen'ral throng and sweet
Of thousand friends; then in a moment see,
How soon this mightiness meets misery!

Will't please your mightiness to wash your hands? Shak.

Mighty. adj. [from might.]

1. Powerful; strong.

Nimrod began to be a mighty one in the earth.

Great is truth, and mighty above all things.

He is wise in heart and mighty in strength.

2. Excellent, or powerful in any act.

The mighty master smil'd.

Mighty. adv. In a great degree. Not to be used but in very low language.

Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns;
He reigns; How long? Till some usurper rise,
And he too mighty thoughtful, mighty wife!

Studies new lines.

Migration. n. f. [from migrare, Lat.] Act of changing place.

MIL

Aristotle distinguisheth their times of generation, latitancy, and migration, sanity, and venation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Although such alterations, transitions, migrations of the centre of gravity, and elevations of new islands, had actually happened, yet these shells could never have been reposed thereby in the manner we find them.

Milch. adj. [from milk.] Giving milk.

Hence doth, at still of midnight,
Walk round about an oak, with ragged horns;
And then he blais the tree, and takes the cattle,
And makes milch kine yield blood.

When the saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport,
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs,
The instant burst of clamour that she made,
Would have made milch the burning eyes of heav'n.

The best mixtures of water in ponds for cattle, to make them more milch, fatten, or keep them from murrain, may be chalk and nitre.

One of five-one have been flayed, excepting infants at nurse, caused rather by carelessness and infirmity of the milch women.

With the turneps they feed sheep, milch-cows, or fating cattle.

Mild. adj. [mild, Saxon.]

1. Kind; tender; good; indulgent; merciful; compassionate; clement; soft; not severe; not cruel.

The execution of justice is committed to his judges, which is the fever part; but the milder part, which is mercy, is wholly left in the king.

If that mild and gentle god thou be,
Who dost mankind below with pity see.

It teaches us to adore him as a mild and merciful being, of infinite love to his creatures.

2. Soft; gentle; not violent.

The rosy morn renews her light,
And milder glory to the noon.

Nothing reprov'd or fallen was to see,
But sweet regards, and pleasing fancy;
Mild was his accent, and his action free.

Sylvia's like autumn ripe, yet mild as May,
More bright than noon, yet fresh as early day.

The folding gates diffus'd a silver light,
And with a milder gleam refresh'd the sight.

3. Not acrid; not corrosive; not acrimonious; demulcent; assuasive; mollifying; lenitive.

Their qualities are changed by rendering them acrimonious or mild.

4. Not sharp; mellow; sweet; having no mixture of acidity.

The Irish were transplanted from the woods and mountains into the plains, that, like fruit trees, they might grow the milder, and bear the better and sweeter fruit.

Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
Not knowing which was mild or stale.

Mildew. n. f. [mildew, Saxon.]

Mildew is a disease that happens in plants, and is caused by a dewy moisture which falls on them, and continuing, for want of the sun's heat, to draw it up, by its acrimony corrodes, gnaws, and spoils, the inmost substance of the plant, and hinders the circulation of the nutritive sap; upon which the leaves begin to fade, and the blossoms and fruit are much prejudic'd: or, mildew is rather a concrete substance, which exudes through the pores of the leaves. What the gardeners commonly call mildew is an insect, which is frequently found in great plenty, preying upon this exudation. Others say, that mildew is a thick, clammy vapour, exhaled in the Spring and Summer from the plants, blossoms, and even the earth itself, in close, still weather, where there is neither sun enough to draw it upwards to any considerable height, nor wind of force strong enough to disperse it: it condenses and falls on plants, and with its thick, clammy substance stops the pores, and by that means prevents perspiration. Miller thinks the true cause of the mildew appearing most upon plants which are exposed to the East, is a dry temperature in the air when the wind blows from that point, which stops the pores of the plants, and prevents their perspiration; whereby the juices of the plants are condensed upon the surface of their leaves, which being of a sweetish nature, insects are invited thereto, where finding proper nutriment they deposit their eggs, and multiply so fast as to cover the whole surfaces of the plants, and, by corroding the vessels, prevent the motion of the sap. It is observable, that whenever a tree has been greatly affected by this mildew, it seldom recovers it in two or three years, and many times never is intirely clear from it after.

Down fell the mildew of his fured words.

The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or champain grounds, it seldom cometh.

Soon blissing mildew black'ned all the grain.

MIL

To MILDEW. v. a. To taint with mildew.

Here is your husband, like a mildew'd ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother.

The air once heated maketh the flame burn more mildly, and so helpeth the continuance.

MILDNESS. n. f. [from mild.]

1. Gentleness; tenderness; mercy; clemency.

This milky gentleness and course of yours;
You are much more at task for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmful mildness.

The same majestic mildness held its place;
Nor lost the monarch in his dying face.

His probity and mildness shows
His care of friends and scorn of foes.

I saw with what a brow you brav'd your fate;
Yet with what mildness bore your father's hate.

2. Contrariety to acrimony.

MILE. n. f. [from passus, Latin.] The usual measure of roads in England, one thousand seven hundred and sixty yards, or five thousand two hundred and eighty feet.

We must measure twenty miles to-day.

Within this three miles may you see it coming.

A moving grove.

When the enemy appeared, the foot and artillery was four miles behind.

Millions of miles, so rapid is their race,
To cheer the earth they in few moments pass.

MILITANT. adj. [from militans, Latin; militante, Fr.]

1. Fighting; prosecuting the business of a soldier.

Against foul fiends they aid us militant.

They for us fight; they watch and duly ward,
And their bright squadrons round about us plant.

2. Engaged in warfare with hell and the world. A term applied to the church of Christ on earth, as opposed to the church triumphant.

Then are the publick duties of religion best ordered, when the militant church doth resemble, by sensible means, that hidden dignity and glory wherewith the church triumphant in heaven is beautified.

The state of a Christian in this world is frequently compared to a warfare: and this allusion has appeared so just, that the character of militant has obtained as the common distinction of that part of Christ's church sojourning here in this world from that part of the family at rest.

MILITARY. adj. [from militaris, Latin; militaire, Fr.]

1. Engaged in the life of a soldier; soldierly.

In the time of Severus and Antoninus, many, being soldiers, had been converted unto Christ, and notwithstanding continued still in that military course of life.

3. Yielding milk.

Perhaps my passion he did disdain,

And courts the milky mothers of the plains. Rescuer.

4. Soft; gentle; tender; timorous.

Has friendship such a faint and milky heart,

It turns in less than two nights. Shakespeare.

This milky gentleness and course of yours,

You are much more at talk for want of wisdom,

Than prais'd for harmful mildness. Shakespeare, King Lear.

MILKY-WAY. n. f. [milk and way.] The galaxy.

The milky-way, or via lactea, is a broad white path or track, encompassing the whole heavens, and extending itself in some places with a double path, but for the most part with a single one. Some of the ancients, as Aristotle, imagined that this path consisted only of a certain exhalation hanging in the air; but, by the telescopic observations of this age, it hath been discovered to consist of an innumerable quantity of fixed stars, different in situation and magnitude, from the confused mixture of whose light its whole colour is supposed to be occasioned. It passes through the constellations of Cassiopeia, Cygnus, Aquila, Perseus, Andromeda, part of Ophiucus and Gemini, in the northern hemisphere; and in the southern it takes in part of Scorpio, Sagittarius, Centaurus, the Argo Navis and the Ara. The galaxy hath usually been the region in which new stars have appeared; as that in Cassiopeia, which was seen in A. D. 1572; that in the breast of the Swan, and another in the knee of Serpentarius; which have appeared for a while, and then become invisible again. Havrin.

Nor need we with a prying eye survey

It forcibly intrudes upon our sight. Creech's Manilian.

How many stars there must be, a naked eye may give us some faint glimpse, but much more a good telescope, directed towards that region of the sky called the milky-way. Cleyn.

MILL

MINACIOUS. adj. [minax, Lat.] Full of threats.
MINACITY. n. f. [from minax, Latin.] Disposition to use threats.
MINATORY. adj. [minor, Latin.] Threatening.
The king made a statute monitory and minatory, towards justices of peace, that they should duly execute their office, inviting complaints against them. Bacon's Henry VII.
TO MINCE. v. a. [contracted, as it seems, from minish, or from mincer; mince, French, small.]
1. To cut into very small parts.
She saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport,
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs. Shakspeare.
With a good chopping-knife mince the two capons as small as ordinary minced meat. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
What means the service of the church so imperfectly, and by halves, read over? What makes them mince and mangle that in their practice, which they could swallow whole in their subscriptions? South's Sermons.
Revive the wits;
But murder first, and mince them all to bits. Dunciad.
2. To mention any thing scrupulously, by a little at a time; to palliate; to extenuate.
I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say I love you. Shakspeare's Henry V.
Think it a bastard, whom the oracle
Hath doubtfully pronounc'd thy throat shall cut,
And mince it. Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.
Behold yon simpering dame, whose face between her forks preludes frow; that minces virtue, and does shake the head to hear of pleasure's name. Shakspeare, King Lear.
Iago,
Thy honesty and love doth mince this matter,
Making it light to Cassio. Shakspeare's Othello.
These gifts,
Saving your mincing, the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it. Shakspeare, Henry VIII.
I'll try to force you to your duty:
For so it is, howe'er you mince it,
Ere we part, I shall evince it. Hadibras, p. ii.
Siren; now mince the fin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase,
Say you contented not to Sancho's death,
But barely forbade it. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
If, to mince his meanings, I had either omitted some part of what he said, or taken from the strength of his expression,
I certainly had wronged him. Dryden.
These, feeling no where water enough to effect a general deluge, were forced to mince the matter, and make only a partial one of it, restraining it to Asia. Woodward.
TO MINCE. v. n.
1. To walk nicely by short steps; to act with appearance of scrupulousness and delicacy; to affect nicety.
By her side did sit the bold Sanfloy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy. Fairy Queen.
I'll turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride. Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.
A harlot form soft sliding by,
With mincing step, small voice, and languid eye. Dunciad.
2. To speak small and imperfectly.
The reeve, miller, and cook, are as much distinguished from each other, as the mincing lady prioress and the broad-speaking wife of Bath. Dryden's Fables.
MINCINGLY. adv. [from mince.] In small parts; not fully.
Justice requireth nothing mincingly, but all with prefixed, and heaped, and even over-enlarged measure. Hooker, b. i.
MIND. n. f. [gemine, Saxon.]
1. The intelligent power.
I am a very foolish, fond old man;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakspeare, King Lear.
This word being often used for the soul giving life, is attributed abusively to madmen, when we say that they are of a distracted mind, instead of a broken understanding; which word, mind, we use also for opinion; as, I am of this or that mind: and sometimes for mens conditions or virtues; as, he is of an honest mind, or a man of a just mind: sometimes for affection; as, I do this for my mind's sake: sometimes for the knowledge of principles, which we have without discourse: oftentimes for spirits, angels, and intelligences; but as it is used in the proper signification, including both the understanding agent and passible, it is described to be a pure, simple, substantial act, not depending upon matter, but having relation to that which is intelligible, as to his first object: or more at large thus; a part or particle of the soul, whereby it doth understand, not depending upon matter, nor needing any organ, free from passion coming from without, and apt to be delivered as eternal from that which is mortal. Raleigh.

MIN

2. Liking; choice; inclination; propension; affection.
Our question is, whether all be the fin which is done without direction by scripture, and not whether the Israelites did at any time amiss, by following their own minds without asking counsel of God. Hooker, b. ii.
We will consider of your suit;
And come some other time to know our mind. Shakspeare.
Being so hard to me that brought your mind,
I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind. Shakspeare.
I will have nothing else but only this;
And now methinks I have a mind to it. Shakspeare.
Be of the same mind one towards another. Rom. xii. 16.
Hast thou a wife after thy mind? forsoke her not. Echus.
They had a mind to French Britain; but they have let fall their bit. Bacon's War with Spain.
Sudden mind arose
In Adam, not to let th' occasion pass,
Given him by this great conference, to know
Of things above this world. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
Waller coasted on the other side of the river, but at such a distance that he had no mind to be engaged. Clarendon.
He had a great mind to do it. Clarendon.
All the arguments to a good life will be very insignificant to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon such cheap terms. Tillotson's Sermons.
Suppose that after eight years peace he hath a mind to infringe any of his treaties, or invade a neighbouring state, what opposition can we make? Addison.
3. Thoughts; sentiments.
Th' ambiguous god,
In these mysterious words, his mind expresseth,
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest. Dryden.
4. Opinion.
The earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose as fearing you, it shook. Shakspeare.
These men are of the mind, that they have clearer ideas of infinite duration than of infinite space, because God has existed from all eternity; but there is no real matter coextended with infinite space. Locke.
The gods permitting traitors to succeed,
Become not parties in an impious deed;
And, by the tyrant's murder, we may find,
That Cato and the gods were of a mind. Granville.
5. Memory; remembrance.
The king knows their disposition; a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
When he brings
Over the earth a cloud, will therein set
His triple-coloured bow, whereon to look,
And call to mind his covenant. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
These, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menalcas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.
The cavern's mouth alone was hard to find,
Because the path diffus'd was out of mind. Dryden.
They will put him in mind of his own waking thoughts, ere these dreams had as yet made their impressions on his fancy. Atterbury's Sermons.
A wholesome law time out of mind;
Had been confirm'd by fate's decree. Swift's Miscel.
TO MIND. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To mark; to attend.
His mournful plight is swallowed up unwarres,
Forgetful of his own that minds another's cares. Fa. Q.
Not then mistrust, but tender love enjoins,
That I should mind thee oft; and mind thou me! Milton.
If, in the raving of a frantic muse,
And *mind*ing more his verses than his way,
Any of these should drop into a well. Rescramen.
Cease to request me; let us mind our way;
Another song requires another day. Dryden.
He is daily called upon by the word, the ministers, and inward suggestions of the holy spirit, to attend to these prospects, and mind the things that belong to his peace. Rogers.
2. To put in mind; to remind.
Let me be punished, that have *mind*ed you
Of what you should forget. Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.
I desire to mind those persons of what Saint Austin hath said. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
This *mind*s me of a cobbling colonel of famous memory. L'Estrange.
I shall only mind him, that the contrary supposition, if it could be proved, is of little use. Locke.
TO MIND. v. n. To incline; to be disposed.
When one of them mindeth to go into rebellion, he will convey away all his lordships to scolders in trust. Spectator.
MIND.

MIN

MIND. n. f. [from mind.] Disposed; inclined; affected.
We come to know
How you stand *mind*ed in the weighty difference Between the king and you. Shakspeare, Henry VIII.
Whole fellowship therefore unmeet for thee,
Good reason was thou freely should'st dislike,
And be so *mind*ed still. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.
If men were *mind*ed to live virtuously, to believe a God would be no hindrance to any such design, but very much for its advancement. Tillotson's Sermons.
Pyrrhus is nobly *mind*ed; and I faint
Would live to thank him. Philips.
MINDFUL. adj. [mind and full.] Attentive; having memory.
I acknowledge the usefulness of your directions, and I promise you to be mindful of your admonitions. Hammond.
MINDFULLY. adv. [from mindful.] Attentively.
MINDFULNESS. n. f. [from mindful.] Attention; regard.
1. Inattentive; regardless.
Curst Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forget now thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them. Shakspeare.
As the strong eagle in the silent wood,
Mindless of warlike rage, and hostile care,
Plays round the rocky cliff, or crystal flood. Prior.
2. Not endued with a mind; having no intellectual powers.
Pronounce thee a gross low, a mindless slave,
Or else a hovering temporizer. Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.
God first made angels bodiless, pure, minds;
Then other things, which mindless bodies be:
Last, he made man. Davies.
MIND-STRIKEN. adj. [mind and stricken.] Moved; affected in his mind.
He had been so mind-stricken by the beauty of virtue in that noble king, though not born his subject, he ever professed himself his servant. Sidney, b. ii.
MINE. pronoun possessive. [myn, Saxon; min, German;
min, French; meus, Latin.] It was anciently the practice to use my before a consonant and mine before a vowel, which euphony still requires to be observed. Mine is always used when the substantive precedes: as, this is my cat; this cat is mine. Belonging to me.
The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Thou art a foul in blis, but I am bound Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Sidney, b. ii.
When a wife man gives thee better counsel, give me mine.
Shakspeare's King Lear.
If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still. Shakspeare.
A friend of mine is come to me, and I have nothing to set before him. Locke xi. 6.
That palm is mine. Dryden.

Could have completed such an ill as that,
If women had not mingled in the mischief. Rower.
She, when she saw her sistersymphs, suppress'd
Her rising fears, and mingled with the rest. Addison.
MINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Mixture; medley; confused mass.
Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make minge with our rattling tabourines. Shakspeare.
Neither can I defend my Spanish Fryar; though the comical parts are diverting, and the serious moving, yet they are of an unnatural minge. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
MINIATURE. n. f. [from the verb.] He who mingles.
MINIATURE. n. f. [miniature, French.]
1. Representation in a small compass; representation less than the reality.
The water, with twenty bubbles, not content to have the picture of their face in large, would in each of these bubbles set forth the miniature of them. Sidney, b. ii.
If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature: in order to keep our posterity from dwindling, we have instituted a tall club. Addison's Guard.
The hidden ways
Of nature would'st thou know? how first she frames
All things in miniature? thy specular orb
Apply to well dissected kernels: lo!
Strange forms arise, in each a little plant
Unfolds its boughs: observe the slender threads
Of first beginning trees, their roots, their leaves,
In narrow seeds describ'd. Philips.

MINIKIN. adj. 1. Small; diminutive. Used in slight contempt.
Sleepst, or wakest thou, jolly shepherd,
Thy sheep be in the corn;
And for one blast of thy minikin mouth,
Thy sheep shall take no harm.
Shakefp. King Lear.
MINIM. n. f. [from minimus, Lat.]
1. A small being; a dwarf.
Not all
Minims of nature; some of serpent-kind,
Wond'rous in length, and corpulence, involv'd
Their snaky folds, and added wings. Milton's Par. Lost.
2. This word is applied, in the northern counties, to a small fort of fish, which they pronounce menim. See MINNOW.
MINIMUS. n. f. [Latin.] A being of the least size.
Get you gone, you dwarf,
You minimus of hindring knot-grass made;
You bead, you acorn.
Shakefp. Minion. n. f. [mignon, French.] A favourite; a darling; a low dependant; one who pleases rather than benefits. A word of contempt, or of slight and familiar kindness.
Minion, said she; indeed I was a pretty one in those days;
I see a number of lads that love you.
They were made great courtiers, and in the way of minions, when advancement, the most mortal offence to envy, stirred up their former friend to overthrow them. Sidney.
One, who had been a special minion of Andromanas, hated us for having dispossessed him of her heart. Sidney, b. ii.
Go rate thy minions;
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign. Shakefp. Henry VI.
Duncan's horses,
Beauteous and swift, the minions of the race,
Turn'd wild in nature. Shakefp. Macbeth.
His company must do his minions grace,
Whilst I at home starve for a merry look. Shakefp.
Edward sent one army into Ireland; not for conquest, but to guard the person of his minion Piers Gaveston. Davies.
If a man should launch into the history of human nature, we should find the very minions of princes linked in conspiracies against their master. L'Estrange's Fables.
The drowsy tyrant by his minions led,
To regal rage devotes some patriot's head. Swift.
MINIOUS. adj. [from minimus, Latin.] Of the colour of red lead or vermilion.
Some conceive, that the Red Sea receiveth a red and mi- nious tincture from springs that fall into it. Brown.
To MINISH. v. a. [from diminish; minus, Latin.] To lessen;
to lop; to impair.
Ye shall not minish ought from your bricks of your daily talk. Exod. v. 19.
They are minished and brought low through oppression.
Psal. cvii. 39.
Another law was to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipped, minished, or impaired coins of silver, not to be current in payments. Bacon's Henry VII.
MINISTER. n. f. [minister, Latin; ministre, Fr.]
1. An agent; one who is employed to any end; one who acts not by any inherent authority, but under another.
You, whom virtue hath made the prince of felicity, be not the minister of ruin. Sidney, b. ii.
Rumble thy belly full; spit fire, spout rain,
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters;
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;
But yet I call you serve ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakefp. King Lear.
Th' internal minister advanc'd, Seiz'd the due victim. Dryden's Theodore and Honoria.
Other spirits govern'd by the will,
Shoot through their tracks, and distant muscles fill;
This sovereign, by his arbitrary nod,
Refrains or lends his ministers abroad. Blackmore.
2. One who is employed in the administration of government.
Kings must be answerable to God, but the ministers to kings, whose eyes, ears, and hands they are, must be answerable to God and man. Bacon.
3. One who serves at the altar; one who performs sacerdotal functions.
Epaphras, a faithful minister of Christ. 1 Col. i. 7.
The ministers are always preaching, and the governors putting forth edicts against dancing and gaming. Addison.
The ministers of the gospel are especially required to shine as lights in the world, because the distinction of their station

MIN

- renders their conduct more observable; and the presumption of their knowledge, and the dignity of their office, gives a peculiar force and authority to their example. Rogers.
4. A delegate; an official.
If wrongfully
Let God revenge; for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister. Shakefp. Rich. II.
5. An agent from a foreign power, without the dignity of an ambassador.
To MINISTER. v. a. [ministro, Latin.] To give; to supply;
to afford.
All the customs of the Irish would minister occasion of a most ample discourse of the original and antiquity of that people. Spenser on Ireland.
Now he that ministreth feed to the fower, both minister bread for your food and multiply your feed fown. 2 Cor. ix.
The wounded patient bears
The artist's hand that ministers the cure. Orway's Orphan.
To MINISTER. v. n.
1. To attend; to serve in any office.
Certain of them had the charge of the ministering vessels, to bring them in and out by tale. 1 Chron. ix. 28.
They which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple. 1 Cor. ix. 13.
At table Eve
Minister'd naked, and their flowing cups
With pleasant liquors crown'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
2. To give medicines.
Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain? Shak. Macb.
3. To give supplies of things needful; to give assistance; to contribute; to conduce.
Others ministered unto him of their substance. Luke viii. 3.
He who has a soul wholly void of gratitude, should let his soul to learn of his body; for all the parts of that minister to one another. South's Sermons.
There is no truth which a man may more evidently make out than the existence of a God; yet he that shall content himself with things as they minister to us pleasures and passions, and not make enquiry a little farther into their causes and ends, may live long without any notion of such a being. Locke.
Those good men, who take such pleasure in relieving the miserable for Christ's sake, would not have been less forward to minister unto Christ himself. Atterbury.
Fasting is not absolutely good, but relatively, and as it minister to other virtues. Smalridge's Sermons.
4. To attend on the service of God.
Whether prophesy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering.
Rem. xii. 7.
MINISTERIAL. adj. [from minister.]
1. Attendant; acting as command.
Understanding is required in a man; courage and vivacity in the lion; service, and ministerial officiousness, in the ox.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
From essences unseen, celestial names,
Enlight'ning spirits, and ministerial flames,
Lift we our reason to that sovereign cause,
Who blest'd the whole with life. Prior.
2. Acting under superior authority.
For the ministerial officers in court there must be an eye unto them. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Abstinence, the apostle determines, is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial cause of moral effects; as it recalls us from the world, and gives a serious turn to our thoughts. Rogers's Sermons.
3. Sacerdotal; belonging to the ecclesiasticks or their office.
These speeches of Jerom and Chrysostom plainly allude unto such ministerial garments as were then in use. Hooker.
4. Pertaining to ministers of state, or persons in subordinate authority.
MINISTRY. n. f. [ministerium, Lat.] Office; service. This word is now contracted to ministry, but used by Milton as four syllables.
They that will have their chamber filled with a good scent, make some odoriferous water be blown about it by their servants mouths that are dextrous in that ministry. Digby.
This temple to frequent
With ministries due, and solemn rites. Milton, b. xii.
MINISTRAL. adj. [from minister.] Pertaining to a minister.
MINISTRANTS. adj. [from minister.] Attendant; acting at command.
Him thrones, and pow'rs,
Princedom, and dominations ministrant, Accompany'd to heav'n-gate. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Ministrant to their queen with busy care,
Four faithful handmaids the soft rites prepare. Pope.

MINISTRATION.

MIN

- MINISTRATION*. n. f. [from ministro, Latin.]
1. Agency; intervention; office of an agent delegated or commissioned by another.
God made him the instrument of his providence to me, as he hath made his own land to him, with this difference, that God, by his ministration to me, intends to do him a favour.
Taylor's living hely.
Though sometimes effected by the immediate fiat of the divine will, yet I think they are most ordinarily done by the ministration of angels. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
2. Service; office; ecclesiastical function.
If the present ministration be more glorious than the former, the minister is more holy. Atterbury's Sermons.
MINIUM. n. f. [Latin.]
Melt lead in a broad earthen vessel unglazed, and stir it continually till it be calcined into a grey powder; this is called the calx of lead; continue the fire, stirring it in the same manner, and it becomes yellow; in this state it is used in painting, and is called masticot or masticot; after this put it into a reverberatory furnace, and it will calcine further, and become of a fine red, which is the common minium or red lead: among the ancients minium was the name for cinnabar: the modern minium is used externally, and is excellent in cleansing and healing old ulcers. Hill's Mat. Med.
MINISTRY. n. f. [contracted from ministry; ministerium, Lat.]
1. Office; service.
So far is an indistinction of all persons, and, by consequence, an anarchy of all things, so far from being agreeable to the will of God, declared in his great household, the world, and especially in all the ministries of his proper household the church, that there was never yet any time, I believe, since it was a number, when some of its members were not more sacred than others. Sprat's Sermons.
2. Office of one set apart to preach; ecclesiastical function.
Their ministry perform'd, and race well run,
Their doctrine and their story written left,
They die. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
Saint Paul was miraculously called to the ministry of the gospel, and had the whole doctrine of the gospel from God by immediate revelation; and was appointed the apostle of the Gentiles for propagating it in the heathen world. Locke.
3. Agency; interposition.
The natural world he made after a miraculous manner;
but directs the affairs of it ever since by standing rules, and the ordinary ministry of second causes.
The poets introduced the ministry of the gods, and taught the separate existence of human souls. Bentley's Sermons.
4. Bufiles.
He safe from loud alarms,
Abhor'd the wicked ministry of arms. Dryden's Zen.
5. Persons employed in the public affairs of a state.
I converse in full freedom with many considerable men of both parties; and if not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as happening to have made acquaintance at court more under one ministry than another. Swift.
MINNOCK. n. f. Of this word I know not the precise meaning. It is not unlikely that minnock and minx are originally the same word.
An ass's pole I fixed on his head;
Anon his Thistle must be answered,
And forth my minnock comes. Shakefp. Minnow. n. f. [minne, French.] A very small fish; a pink;
a corruption of minim, which see.
Hear you this triton of the minnows? Shakefp.
The minnows, when he is in perfect season, and not sick, which is only presently after spawning, hath a kind of dappled or waved colour, like a panther, on his sides, inclining to a greenish and sky-colour, his belly being milk-white, and his back almost black or blackish: he is a sharp biter at a small worm in hot weather, and in the Spring they make excellent minnow tangles; for being washed well in salt, and their heads and tails cut off, and their guts taken out, being fried with yolks of eggs, primroses and tanfy. Walton's Angler.
The nimble turning of the minnow is the perfection of min- now fishing. Walton's Angler.
MINOR. adj. [Latin.]
1. Petty; inconsiderable.
If there are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto faith, yet is it not safe to condemn inferiour falsities. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.
2. Less; smaller.
They altered this custom from cases of high concernment to the most trivial debates, the minor part ordinarily entering their protest.
The difference of a third part in so large and collective an account is not strange, if we consider how differently they are set forth in minor and less mistakable numbers.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
MINOR. n. f.
1. One under age; one whose youth cannot yet allow him to manage his own affairs.

MIN

- King Richard the Second, the first ten years of his reign;
was a minor. Davies on Ireland.
He and his muse might be minors, but the liberties are full grown. Collier's View of the Stage.
Long as the year's dull circle seems to run. Pope.
When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one. Pope.
The noblest blood of England having been shed in the grand rebellion, many great families became extinct, or supported only by minors. Swift.
A minor or infant cannot be said to be contumacious, because he cannot appear as a defendant in court, but by his guardian. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. The second or particular proposition in the syllogism.
The second or minor proposition was, that this kingdom hath cause of just fear of overthrow from Spain. Bacon.
He supposed that a philosopher's brain was like a forest;
where ideas are ranged like animals of several kinds; that the major is the male, the minor the female, which copulate by the middle term, and engender the conclusion. Arbutnot.
To MINORATE. v. a. [from minor, Lat.] To lessen; to diminish. A word not yet admitted into the language.
This it doth not only by the advantageous assistance of a tube, but by shewing in what degrees distance minimates the object. Glanville's Scept.
MINORATION. n. f. [from minuere.] The act of lessening; diminution; decrease. A word not admitted.
Bodies emit virtue without abatement of weight, as is most evident in the loadstone; whose effluences are communicable without a minoration of gravity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
We hope the mercies of God will consider our degenerated integrity unto some minoration of our offences. Brown.
MINORITY. n. f. [minoritas, Fr. from minor, Latin.]
1. The state of being under age.
I mov'd the king, my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter, in the minority of them both. Shakefp.
He is young, and his minority
Is put into the trust of Richard Gloster. Shakefp.
These changes in religion should be staid, until the king were of years to govern by himself; this the people apprehending worse than it was, a question was raised, whether, during the king's minority, such alterations might be made or
no. Hayward's Edw. VI.
Henry the Eighth, doubting he might die in the minority of his son, procured an act to pass, that no statute made during the minority of the king should bind him or his successors, except it were confirmed by the king at his full age. But the first act that passed in king Edward the Sixth's time, was a repeal of that former act; at which time nevertheless the king was minor. Bacon's Henry VII.
If there be evidence, that it is not many ages since nature was in her minority, this may be taken for a good proof that she is not eternal. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Their counsels are warlike and ambitious, though something tempered by the minority of their king. Temple.
2. The state of being less.
From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a minority, or smallness in the exclusion. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
3. The smaller number: as, the minority held for that question in opposition to the majority.
MINOTAUR. n. f. [minotaure, French; minos and taurus.] A monster invented by the poets, half man and half bull, kept in Daedalus's labyrinth.
Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth,
There minotaurs, and ugly treasors lurk. Shakefp.
MINSTER. n. f. [munster, Saxon.] A monastery; an ecclesiastical fraternity; a cathedral church. The word is yet retained at York and Lichfield.
MINSTREL. n. f. [menestrel, Spanish; menestrallus, low Latin.]
A musician; one who plays upon instruments.
Hark how the minstrels 'gin to flourish loud
Their merry musick that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling croud,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser's Epithal.
I will give you the minstrel.
—Then I will give you the serving creature. Shakefp.
I to the vulgar am become a jest;
Esteemed as a minstrel at a feast. Sandy's Paraphrase.
These fellows
Were once the minstrels of a country show;
Follow'd the prizes through each paltry town,
By trumpet cheeks and bloated faces known. Dryden.
Often our fears and poets have confest'd,
That musick's force can tame the furious beast;
Can make the wolf, or foaming boar restrain
His rage; the lion drop his crested mane,
Attentive to the song; the lynx forget
His wrath to man, and lick the minstrel's feet. Prior.
MINSTRELSEY. n. f. [from minstrel.]
1. Musick; instrumental harmony.
Apollo's self will envy at his play,
And all the world applaud his minstrelseiy. Davies.

A drop through his flesh did flow,
Which by misdiet daily greater grew.

Fairy Queen, b. i.
To MISDISTINGUISH. v. a. [mis and distinguish.] To make wrong distinctions.
If we imagine a difference where there is none, because we distinguish where we should not, it may not be denied that we misdistinguish.

Hooker, b. iii.
To MISDO. v. a. [mis and do.] To do wrong; to commit a crime; to offend.
Afford me place to show what recompence
T'wards thee I intend for what I have misdone.

Milton.
To MISDO. v. n. To commit faults.
Try the erring soul
Not wilfully misdoing, but unaware Mifled.

Paradise Regain'd, b. i.
The worst is, to think ourselves safe so long as we keep our injuries from the knowledge of men, and out of our own view, without any awe of that all-seeing eye that observes all our misdoings.
L'Estrange.
I have misdone, and I endure the smart,
Loth to acknowledge, but more loth to part.

Dryden.
MISDOER. n. f. [mis and do.] An offender; a criminal; a malefactor.
Were they not contained in duty with a fear of law, which inflicteth sharp punishments to misdoers, no man should enjoy any thing.

Spenser on Ireland.
To MISDOUBT. v. a. [mis and doubt.] To suspect of deceit or danger.
If the only misdoubted me, I were in heaven; for quickly I would bring sufficient assurance.

Sidney, b. ii.
I do not misdoubt my wife, but I would be loth to turn them both together; a man may be too confident.
Shakespeare.
The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubteth ev'ry bush;
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd.

Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.
If you misdoubt me that I am not the,
I know not how I shall assure you farther.
Shakespeare.
To believe his wiles my truth can move,
Is to misdoubt my reason or my love.

Dryden.
MISDOUBT. n. f. [mis and doubt.]
1. Suspicion of crime or danger.
He cannot so precisely weed this land,

MIS

As his misdoubts present occasion;
His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfixen to shake a friend.

Shakespeare. Henry IV.
2. Irresolution; hesitation.
York, steel thy fearful thoughts,
And change misdoubts to resolution.

Shakespeare. Henry VI.
MISE. n. f. [French.] Illness. Law term.
To MISEMPLY. v. a. [mis and employ.] To use to wrong purposes.
Their frugal fathers gains they misemploy,
And turn to point and pearl, and ev'ry female toy.

Dryden.
Some taking things upon trust, misemploy their power by lazily enslaving their minds to the dictates of others.
Locke.
That vain and foolish hope, which is misemployment on temporal objects, produces many sorrows.
Addison's Spectator.
They grew dissolute and prophan; and by misemploying the advantages which God had thrown into their lap, provoked him to withdraw them.

Atterbury.
MISEMPLYMENT. n. f. [mis and employment.] Improper application.
An improvident expence, and misemployment of their time and faculties.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

MISER. n. f. [Latin.]
1. A wretched person; one overwhelmed with calamity.
Do not disdain to carry with you the woful words of a miser now despairing; neither be afraid to appear before her, bearing the base title of the sinner.

Sidney, b. ii.
I wish that it may not prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune to have met with such a miser as I am.
Sidney.
Fair son of Mars, that seek with warlike spoil
And great achievements, great yourself to make,
Vouchsafe to stay your steed for humble miser's sake.

Fairy Queen, b. ii.
2. A wretch; a mean fellow.
Decrepid miser! base ignoble wretch!
I am descended of a gentler blood.

Shakespeare. Henry VI.
3. A wretch covetous to extremity; one who in wealth makes himself miserable by the fear of poverty.
Though the be dearer to my soul than rest
To weary pilgrims, or to misers gold,
Rather than wrong Castile I'd forget her.

Otravio's Orphan.
No silver fairs by dying misers giv'n,
Here brib'd the rage of ill-requited heav'n;
But such plain roofs as piety could raise,
And only vocal with the Maker's praise.

Pope.
MISERABLE. adj. [miserable, French; miser, Latin.]
1. Unhappy; calamitous; wretched.
O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant, bloody scepter'd!

When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again? Shakespeare.
Most miserable is the desire that's glorious. Shakespeare.
What's more miserable than discontent? Shakespeare.
It is probable that there will be a future state, and then how miserable is the voluptuous unbeliever left in the lurch.

South's Sermons.
What hopes delude thee, miserable man? Dryden's Zen.
2. Wretched; worthless.
Miserable comforters are ye all.

Job xvi. 2.
3. Culpably parsimonious; stingy.
MISERABLENESS. n. f. [from miserable.] State of misery.
MISERABLY. adv. [from miserable.]

1. Unhappily; calamitously.
Of the five employed by him, two of them quarrelled, one of which was slain, and the other hanged for it; the third drowned himself; the fourth, though rich, came to beg his bread; and the fifth was miserably stabbed to death.

South.
2. Wretchedly; meanly.
As the love I bear you makes me thus invite you; so the same love makes me ashamed to bring you to a place, where you shall be so, not spoken by ceremony but by truth, miserably entertained.

Sidney, b. ii.
3. Covetously.
MISERY. n. f. [miseria, Latin; misere, French.]
1. Wretchedness; unhappiness.
My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery.

Shakespeare. Henry VI.
Happiness, in its full extent, is the utmost pleasure we are capable of, and misery the utmost pain.
Locke.
2. Calamity; misfortune; cause of misery.
When we our betters see bearing our woes,
We scarcely think our miseries our foes.

Shakespeare.
The gods from heav'n survey the fatal strife,
And mourn the miseries of human life.
Dryden's Zen.
3. [From miser.] Covetousness; avarice. Not in use.
He look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck o' th' world: he covets less Than misery itself would give.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
In a fabric of forty thousand pounds charge, I with thirty pounds laid out before in an exact model; for a little misery may easily breed some absurdity of greater charge.

MIS

MISBEST. EM. n. f. [mis and bestem.] Disregard; slight.
To MISFASHION. v. a. [mis and fashion.] To form wrong.
A thing in reason impossible, thorough their misfashioned preconci, appeared unto them no less certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures of God.

Hakewill on Providence.
To MISFORM. v. a. [mis and form.] To put in an ill form.
His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore,
And that misformed shape misshap'd more.

Spenser.
MISFORTUNE. n. f. [mis and fortune.] Calamity; ill luck; want of good fortune.
Fortune thus gave, misery and misfortune is all one,
And of misfortune, fortune hath only the gift.

Sidney.
What world's delight, or joy of living speech,
Can heart so plung'd in sea of sorrows deep,
And heaped with so huge misfortunes reach?

Fa. Q. u.
Confider why the change was wrought,
You'll find it his misfortune, not his fault.

Addison.
To MISGIVE. v. a. [mis and give.] To fill with doubt; to deprive of confidence. It is used always with the reciprocal pronoun.
As Henry's late presaging prophecy
Did glad my heart with hope of this young Richmond;
So doth my heart misgive me in these conflicts.

Shakespeare.
What may befall him, to his harm or ours.
This is strange! Who hath got the right Anne?
My heart misgives me.

Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Yet oft his heart divine of something ill,
Misgives him.
If a conscience thus qualified and informed, be not the measure by which a man may take a true estimate of his ab-solutions, the sinner is left in the plunge of infinite doubts, suspicions, and misgivings, both as to the measures of his present duty, and the final issues of his future reward.

South.
His heart misgave him, that these were so many meeting-houses; but, upon communicating his suspicions, I soon made him easy.
Addison's Freeholder, N. 47.
To MISGOVERN. v. a. [mis and govern.] To govern ill; to administer unfaithfully.
Solymann charged him bitterly, that he had misgoverned the state, and inverted his treasures to his own private use.

Knight's Hist. of the Turks.
Rude, misgovern'd hands, from window tops
Threw dust and rubbish on King Richard's head.

Shakespeare.
MISGOVERNANCE. n. f. [mis and governance.] Irregularity.
Thy muse too long slumbereth in forrowing,
Lulled asleep through love's misgovernance.

Spenser's Poet.
MISGOVERNMENT. n. f. [mis and government.]
1. Ill administration of public affairs.
Men lay the blame of those evils whereof they know not the ground, upon public misgovernment.

Raleigh's Essays.
2. Ill management.
Men are miserable, if their education hath been so undisciplined, as to leave them unfurnished of skill to spend their time; but most miserable, if such misgovernment and unskillfulness make them fall into vicious company.

Taylor.
3. Irregularity; inordinate behaviour.
There is not chastity enough in language
Without offence to utter them: thus, pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment.

Shakespeare.
MISGUIDANCE. n. f. [mis and guidance.] False direction.
The Nicene council fixed the equinox the twenty-first of March for the finding out of Easter; which has caused the misguidance from the sun which we lie under in respect of Easter, and the moveable feasts.

Heldar on Time.
Whoever deceives a man, makes him ruin himself; and by causing an error in the great guide of his actions, his judgment, he causes an error in his choice, the misguidance of which must naturally engage him to his destruction.

South.
To MISGUIDE. v. a. [mis and guide.] To direct ill; to lead the wrong way.
Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect those which favour the other, is wilfully to misguide the understanding; and is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debases it.

Locke.
Misguided prince! no longer urge thy fate,
Nor tempt the hero to unequal war.
Of all the causes which conspire to blind
Man's erring judgment, and misguide the mind,
What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools.

Pope.
MISHAP. n. f. [mis and hap.] Ill chance; ill luck; calamity.
To tell you what miserable mishaps fell to the young prince of Macedon his cousin, I should too much fill your ears with strange horrors.
Since we are thus far entered into the consideration of her mishaps, tell me, have there been any more such tempests wherein she hath thus wretchedly been wrecked.

Spenser.

MIS

Sir knight, take to you wanted strength,
And master these mishaps with patient might.
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps.

Shakespeare.
It cannot be
But that success attends him: if mishaps,
Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n
By his avengers; since no place like this Can fit his punishment, or your revenge.

If the worst of all mishaps hath fallen,
Speak; for he could not die unlike himself.
Denham.
MISHMASH. n. f. Ans. A low word. A mingle or hotch-potch.

To MISINFERR. v. a. [mis and infer.] To infer wrong.
Nestorius teaching rightly, that God and man are distinct natures, did thereupon misinfer, that in Christ those natures can by no conjunction make one person.

Hooker, b. v.
To MISINFORM. v. a. [mis and inform.] To deceive by false accounts.
Some belonged to a man of great dignity, and not as that wicked Simon had misinformed.
2 Mac. iii. 11.
By no means trust to your servants, who mislead you, or misinform you; the reproach will lie upon yourself.

Bacon.
Bid her well beware,
Left by some fair-appearing good surpriz'd,
She dictate false; and misinform the will
To do what God expressly hath forbid.

MISINFORMATION. n. f. [from misinform.] False intelligence; false accounts.
Let not such be discouraged as deserve well, by misinformation of others, perhaps out of envy or treachery.

Bacon.
The vengeance of God, and the indignation of men, will join forces against an insulting baseness, when backed with greatness, and let on by misinformation.

South's Sermons.
To MISINTERPRET. v. a. [mis and interpret.] To explain to a wrong sense.
The gentle reader rests happy to hear the worthiest works misinterpreted, the clearest actions obscured, and the innocentest life traduced.

Benj. Johnson.
After all the care I have taken, there may be several passages misquoted and misinterpreted.
Arbuthnot on Coins.
To MISJOIN. v. a. [mis and join.] To join unfitly or improperly.
In reason's absence mimic fancy wakes
To imitate her; but misjoining shapes,
Wild work produces oft, and most in dreams;
Ill-matching words, and deeds, long past, or late.

Milton.
Luther, more mistaking what he read,
Misjoins the sacred body with the bread.

Dryden.
To MISJUDGE. v. a. [mis and judge.] To form false opinions; to judge ill.
Where we misjudge the matter, a miscarriage draws pity after it; but when we are transported by pride, our ruin lies at our own door.

L'Estrange.
You misjudge;
You see through love, and that deludes your sight;
As, what is straight, seems crooked through the water.

Dryden's All for Love.
By allowing himself in what is innocent, he breeds offence to his weak and misjudging neighbour.

Atterbury's Sermons.
Intestate!
Too long misjudging have I thought thee wise,
But sure relentless folly steals thy breast.

Pope.
To MISLAY. v. a. [mis and lay.] To lay in a wrong place.
Mean time my worthy wife, our arms mislay'd,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd.

Dryden.
The fault is generally mislaid upon nature; and there is often a complaint of want of parts, when the fault lies in want of a due improvement.
Locke.
If the butler be the tell-tale, mislay a spoon, so as he may never find it.

Swift's Rules to Servants.
MISLAY. n. f. [from mislay.] One that puts in the wrong place.
The mislayer of a mere-stone is to blame; but the unjust judge is the capital remover of land-marks, when he defineth amis of lands.

Bacon's Essays.
To MISLEAD. v. a. [mis and lead.] To guide a wrong way; to betray to mischief or mistake.
Take, oh take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn.

Shakespeare.
Those we love,
That are misled upon your cousin's part.

Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Poor misled men: your states are yet worthy pity.
If you would hear, and change your savage minds,
Leave to be mad.

Benj. Johnson's Cataline.
Trust not to your servants who mislead or misinform you.
Bacon's Advice to Pillers.
O thieves!

MIS

Why should'st thou but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller?
What can they teach and not mislead?
Ignorant of themselves, of God much more?
Thou who hast taught me to forgive the ill,
And recompense, as friends, the good misled;
If mercy be a precept of thy will,
Return that mercy on thy servant's head.
The imagination, which is of simple perception, doth never of itself, and directly, mislead us; yet it is the almost fatal means of our deception.
Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, and scrutiny of each successive desire, whether the satisfaction of it does not interfere with our true happiness, and mislead us from it.
'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill
Appear in writing or in judging ill:
But of the two less dangerous is th' offence
To tire our patience, than mislead our sense.
MISLEADER. n. f. [from mislead.] One that leads to ill.
When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots;
Till then I banish thee on pain of death,
As I have done the rest of my misleaders.
They have disclaimed and abandoned those heretical phantasies touching our Saviour, wherein by their misleaders they had been anciently plunged.
To MISLIKE. v. a. [mis and like.] To disapprove; to be not pleased with; to dislike.
It was hard to say, whether he more liked his doings, or misliked the effect of his doings.
Tertullian was not deceived in the nature of the place;
but Aquinas, who misliked this opinion, followed a worse.
Judge not the preacher, for he is thy judge:
If thou mislike him, thou conceiv'st him not.
MISLIKE. n. f. [from the verb.] Disapprobation; dislike.
Setting your toms and your mislike aside,
Tell me some reason, why the lady Gray
Should not become my wife.
Their angry gestures with mislike disclose,
How much his speech offends their noble ears.
MISLIKER. n. f. [from mislike.] One that disapproves.
Open flatterers of great men, privy mislikers of good men, fair speakers with smiling countenances.
MISLICK. n. f. [corrupted from miscellane.] Mixed corn; as,
wheat and rye.
They commonly low those lands with wheat, mislo, and barley.
To MISLIE. v. n. [from mis.] To rain in imperceptible drops, like a thick mist: properly misle.
Ynough, thou mourned hast,
Now gins to mizzle, his we homeward fast.
The very small drops of a misling rain descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles.
This cold precipitates the vapours either in dews, or, if the vapours more copiously ascend, they are condensed into misling, or into showers of small rain, falling in numerous, thick, small drops.
In misling days when I my threher heard,
With nappy beer I to the barn repair'd.
To MISLIVE. v. n. [mis and live.] To live ill.
Should not thine God, that gave him that good,
Eke cherish his child if in his ways he stood,
For if he mislive in leudness and lust,
Little boots all the wealth and the trust.
To MISMANAGE. v. a. [mis and manage.] To manage ill.
The debates of most princes councils would be in danger to be mismanaged, since those who have a great stroke in them are not always perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism.
MISMANAGEMENT. n. f. [mis and management.] Ill management; ill conduct.
It is mismanagement more than want of abilities, that men have reason to complain of in those that differ from them.
The falls of favorites, projects of the great,
Of old mismanagements, taxations new,
All neither wholly false, nor wholly true.
To MISMARK. v. a. [mis and mark.] To mark with the wrong token.
Things are mismarked in contemplation and life for want of application or integrity.
To MISMATCH. v. a. [mis and match.] To match unsuit-ably.

MIS

What at my years forsaken! had I
Ugly, or old, misnatcht to my desires,
My natural defects had taught me
To let me down contented.
To MISNAME. v. a. [mis and name.] To call by the wrong name.
They make one man's fancies, or perhaps failings, confusing laws to others, and convey them as such to their successors, who are bold to misname all unobscuredness to their inco-gnitancy, presumption.
MISNOMER. n. f. [French.] In law, an indictment, or any other act vacated by a wrong name.
To MISOBSEERVE. v. a. [mis and observe.] Not to observe accurately.
They understand it as early as they do language; and, if I misobserve not, they love to be treated as rational creatures sooner than is imagined.
MISOGAMIST. n. f. [mis and gamos.] A marriage hater.
MISOGYNY. n. f. [mis and gyn.] Hatred of women.
To MISORDER. v. a. [mis and order.] To conduct ill; to manage irregularly.
If the child miss either in forgetting a word, or misorder-
ing the sentence, I would not have the master frown.
Yet few of them come to any great age, by reason of their misordered life when they were young.
The time misorder'd doth in common sense
Crowd us, and crush us to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up.
MISORDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Irregularity; disorderly proceedings.
When news was brought to Richard the second, that his uncles, who fought to reform the misorders of his coun-sellers, were assembled in a wood near unto the court, merrily demanded of one Sir Hugh a Linne, who had been a good military man, but was then somewhat distraught of his wits, what he would advise him to do? I'll out, quoth Sir Hugh, and slay them every mother's son; and when thou hast so done, thou hast killed all the faithful friends thou hast in England.
MISORDERLY. adj. [from misorder.] Irregular.
His over-much fearing of you drives him to seek some mis- orderly shift, to be helped by some other book, or to be prompted by some other scholar.
To MISPEL. v. a. [mis and pell.] To spell wrong.
She became a perfect enemy to the arts and sciences, and fearce ever wrote a letter to him without wilfully mispeeling his name.
To MISPEND. v. a. preterite and part. passive mispent. [mis
and pend.]
1. To spend ill; to waste; to consume to no purpose; to throw away.
What a deal of cold business doth a man mispent the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, gathering and venting news.
First guilty conscience does the mirror bring,
Then sharp remorse shoots out her angry sting;
And anxious thoughts, within themselves at strife,
Upbraid the long mispent, luxurious life.
I this writer's want of sense arraign,
Treat all his empty pages with disdain.
And think a grave reply mispent and vain.
He who has lived with the greatest care will find, upon a review of his time, that he has something to redeem; but he who has mispent much has still a greater concern.
Wife men retrieve, as far as they are able, every mispent or unprofitable hour which has slipped from them.
2. To waste, with the reciprocal pronoun.
Now let the arch'd knife their thirsty limbs
Dissever, for the genial moisture due
To apples, otherwise mispends itself
In barren twigs.
MISPENDER. n. f. [from mispent.] One who spends ill or prodigally.
I very much suspect the excellency of those mens parts who are dissolute, and careless mispenders of their time.
MISPERUASION. n. f. [mis and peruasion.] Wrong notion;
false opinion.
Some misperuasions concerning the Divine Attributes tend to the corrupting mens manners.
To MISPLACE. v. a. [mis and place.] To put in a wrong place.
I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders,
Before I'll see the crown so foul misplac'd.
What little arts govern the world! we need not
An armed enemy or corrupted friend,
When service but misplac'd, or love mistaken,
Performs the work.
Is a man betrayed by such agents as he employs? He mis- placed his confidence, took hypocritically for fidelity, and so relied upon the services of a pack of villains.

MIS

Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity; we, who could no way foresee the effect?
To MISPOINT. v. a. [mis and point.] To confuse sentences by wrong punctuation.
To MISPREISE. v. a. Sometimes it signifies mistaken, from the French verb mesprendre; sometimes undervalued or dif-fained, from the French verb mespriser.
1. To mistake.
You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood;
I am not guilty of Lyfander's blood.
2. To fight; to scorn; to despise.
He's so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people who best know him, that I am altogether misprised.
Pluck indignation on thy head;
By the misprising of a maid, too virtuous
For the contempt of empire.
MISPRISION. n. f. [from misprise.]
1. Scorn; contempt.
Here take her hand,
Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift!
That doth in vile misprison shackle up
My love, and her desert.
2. Mistake; misconception.
Thou hast mistaken quite,
And laid thy love juice on some true love's sight;
Of thy misprison must perforce ensue
Some true love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true.
We feel such or such a sentiment within us, and herein is no cheat or misprison; it is truly so, and our sense concludes nothing of its rite.
3. [In common law.] It signifies neglect, negligence, or oversight. Misprison of treason is the concealment, or not disclosing, of known treason; for the which the offenders are to suffer imprisonment during the king's pleasure, lose their goods and the profits of their lands during their lives. Mis- prison of felony, is the letting any person, committed for treason or felony, or suspicion of either, to go before he be indicted.
To MISPROPORTION. v. a. [mis and proportion.] To join without due proportion.
MISPROUD. adj. [mis and praud.] Vitiously proud. Obsolete.
Now I fall, thy tough commixtures melt, Impairing Henry, strength'ning mispraud York.
To MISQUOTE. v. a. [mis and quote.] To quote falsely.
Look how we can, or sad, or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks.
After all the care I have taken, there may be several passages misquoted.
To MISRECEITE. v. a. [mis and recite.] To recite not according to the truth.
He misrecites the argument, and denies the consequence, which is clear.
To MISRECKON. v. a. [mis and reckon.] To reckon wrong;
to compute wrong.
Whoever finds a mistake in the sum total, must allow himself out, though after repeated trials he may not see in which article he has misreckoned.
To MISRELATE. v. a. [mis and relate.] To relate inaccurately or falsely.
To satisfy me that he misrelated not the experiment, he brought two or three small pipes of glass, which gave me the opportunity of trying it.
MISRELATION. n. f. [from misrelate.] False or inaccurate narrative.
Mine aim was only to press home those things in writings, which had been agitated between us by word of mouth; a course much to be preferred before verbal conferences, as being less subject to mistakes and misrelations, and wherein pa-ralogisms are more quickly detected.
To MISREMEMBER. v. a. [mis and remember.] To mistake by tossing to memory.
If I much misremember not, I had such a spirit from peas kept long enough to lose their verdure.
To MISREPORT. v. a. [mis and report.] To give a false account of; to give an account disadvantageous and false.
His doctrine was misreported, as though he had everywhere preached this, not only concerning the Gentiles, but also touching the Jews.
A man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace.
The wrong judgment that misleads us, and makes the will often fallen on the worse side, lies in misreporting upon the various companions of their.
To MISREPORT. n. f. [from the verb.] False account; false and malicious representation.
We defend him not,
Only desire to know his crime: 'tis possible
It may be some mistake or misreport,
Some false suggestion, or malicious scandal.

MIS

As by flattery a man is usually brought to open his bosom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction, and a slanderous mis- report of persons, he is often brought to shut the same event to his best and truest friends.
To MISREPRESENT. v. a. [mis and represent.] To represent not as it is; to falsify to disadvantage: mis often signifies not only error, but malice or mischief.
Two qualities necessary to a reader before his judgment should be allowed are, common honesty and common sense; and that no man could have misrepresented that paragraph, unless he were utterly destitute of one or both.
While it is so difficult to learn the springs of some facts, and so easy to forget the circumstances of others, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious and inquisitive heads, who proceed altogether upon conjectures.
MISREPRESENTATION. n. f. [from misrepresent.]
1. The act of misrepresenting.
They have prevailed by misrepresentations, and other artifices, to make the successor look upon them as the only persons he can trust.
2. Account maliciously false.
Since I have shewn him his foul mistakes and injurious misrepresentations, it will become him publicly to own and retract them.
MISRULE. n. f. [mis and rule.] Tumult; confusion; revel;
unjust domination.
In the portal plac'd, the heav'n-born maid,
Enormous riot, and misrule survey'd.
And through his airy hall the loud misrule
Of driving tempest, is for ever heard.
MISS. n. f. [contracted from mistress.] Baily.
1. The term of honour to a young girl.
Where there are little matters and misses in a house, they are great impediments to the diversions of the servants.
2. A strumpet; a concubine; a whore; a prostitute.
All women would be of one piece,
The virtuous matron and the miss.
This gentle cock, for solace of his life,
Six misses had besides his lawful wife.
To MISS. v. a. [missen, Dutch and German.] Missed pretet.
miss part.
1. Not to hit by the mind; to mistake.
Nor can I miss the way, so strongly drawn
By this new-felt attraction, and infinit.
2. Not to hit by manual aim.
The life you boasted to your jaylin giv'n,
Prince, you have miss'd.
3. To fail of obtaining.
If the desired above all things to have Orgalus, Orgalus feared nothing but to miss Parthenia.
So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that, which one unworthy may attain;
And die with grieving.
Where shall a maid's distracted heart find rest,
If she can miss it in her lover's breast?
When a man misses his great end, happiness, he will acknowledge he judged not right.
4. To discover something to be unexpectedly wanting.
Without him I found a weakness, and a mistrustfulness of myself, as one strayed from his best strength, when at any time I missed him.
In vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderness, so that nothing was miss'd.
5. To be without.
We cannot miss him; he does make our fire,
Fetch in our wood.
6. To omit.
She would never miss one day,
A walk so fine, a sight so gay.
7. To perceive want of.
My redoubt'd love and care,
May ever tend about thee to old age
With all things grateful cheer'd, and so supply'd,
That what by me thou hast lost thou least shalt miss.
He who has a firm, sincere friend, may want all the rest without missing them.
To MISS. v. n.
1. To fly wide; not to hit.
Flying bullets now
To execute his rage, appear too slow,
They miss or sweep but common souls away.
2. Not to succeed.
The general root of superstition is, that men observe when things hit, and not when they miss; and commit to memory the one, and forget and pass over the other.
3. To fail; to mistake.
4. To be lost; to be wanting.
Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn.
My lord,
Shakep. Cymbeline.
Thy

MIS

Thy shepherds we hurt not, neither was there ought misfing unto them.
For a time caught up to God, as once
Moses was in the mount, and missing long,
And the great Thilbite, who on fiery wheels Rode up to heaven, yet once again to come. Milt. Par. R.
5. To miscarry; to fail.
Th' invention all admir'd, and each, how he
To be th' inventor miss'd, so easy it seem'd,
Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
6. To fail to obtain, learn, or find: sometimes with of before the object.
Gritus missing of the Moldavian fell upon Maylat. Knolles.
The moral and relative perfections of the Deity are easy to be understood by us; upon the least reflection we cannot miss of them. Atterbury's Sermons.
Miss. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Loss; want.
In humble dales is footing fast,
The trode is not so tickle,
And though one fall through heedless haste,
Yet is his miss not mickle. Spenser's Pastoral.
I could have better spar'd a better man.
Oh, I should have a heavy miss of thee.
If I were much in love with vanity. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
If these papers have that evidence in them, there will be no great miss of those which are lost, and my reader may be satisfied without them. Locke.
2. Mistake; error.
He did without any great miss in the hardest points of grammar. Asham's Schoolmaster.
Missal. n. f. [missale, Lat. missel, Fr.] The mass book.
By the rubrick of the missal, in every solemn mass, the priest is to go up to the middle of the altar. Stillington.
To MISSALY. v. n. [mis and alay.] To say ill or wrong.
Their ill haviour garrs men missy,
Both of their doctrine and their say. Spenser's Poet.
Diggon Davie, I bid her goddys,
Or Diggon her is, or I missy. Spenser's Poet.
We are not dwarfs, but of equal stature, if Vives missy Hakevill on Providence.
not.
To MISSEREM. v. n. [mis and serem.]
1. To make false appearance.
Foul Dueffa meet,
Who with her witchcraft and misfearing sweet Inveigled her to follow her desires unmeet. Fairy Queen.
2. To misbecome. Obsolete both.
Never knight I saw in such misfearing plight. Fa. Q.
To MISSERVE. v. a. [mis and serve.] To serve unfaithfully.
Great men, who misserve their country, were fined very highly. Arbutnot on Coins.
To MISSHAPE. v. a. part. misshaped and misshapen. [mis and shape.] To shape ill; to form ill; to deform.
A rude misshapen, monstrous rablement. Fa. Q.
His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore,
And that misshapen shape, misshaped more. Fairy Queen.
Him then she does transform to monstrous hues,
And horribly misshapen with ugly fights.
Captiv'd eternally in iron mews. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
This misshaped knave, Shakespeare's Tempest.
His mother was a witch.
And will the yet debate her eyes on me. Shak. Rich. III.
On me that halt and am misshapen thus. Shak. Rich. III.
Let the misshaped trunk that bears this head
Be round impaled with a glorious crown. Shakespeare.
Pride will have a fall: the beautiful trees go all to the wreck here, and only the misshapen and despicable dwarf is left standing. L'Estrange.
Pluto hates his own misshapen race,
Her sister furies fly her hideous face. Dryden's En.
They make bold to destroy ill-formed and misshapen productions. Locke.
The Alps broken into so many steps and precipices, form one of the most irregular, misshapen scenes in the world. Addis.
We ought not to believe that the banks of the ocean are really deformed, because they have not the form of a regular bulwark; nor that the mountains are misshapen, because they are not exact pyramidal and misshap'd appear Some figures monstrous and misshap'd appear Consider'd singly, or beheld too near,
Which but proportion'd to their site or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace. Pope.
2. In Shakespeare, perhaps, it once signifies ill directed: as, to shape a course.
Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
Misshapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skill-less soldiers flask,
Is set on fire. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
MISSILE. adj. [missilis, Lat.] Thrown by the hand; striking at distance.
We bend the bow, or wing the missile dart. Pope.

MIS

MISSION. n. f. [missio, Latin.]
1. Commission; the state of being sent by supreme authority.
Her son tracing the desert wild,
All his great work to come before him set,
How to begin, how to accomplish best,
The divine authority of our mission, and the powers vested in us by the high-priest of our profession, Christ Jesus, are publicly disputed and denied. Atterbury.
2. Persons sent on any account, usually to propagate religion.
In these ships there should be a mission of three of the brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the sciences, manufactures, and inventions of all the world, and bring us books and patterns; and that the brethren should stay abroad till the new mission. Bacon's New Atlantis.
3. Dismission; discharge. Not in use.
In Cesar's army, somewhat the soldiers would have had, yet only demanded a mission or discharge, though with no intention it should be granted, but thought to wrench him to their other desires; whereupon with one cry they asked mission. Bacon's Apology.
4. Faction; party. Not in use.
Glorious deeds, in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions amongst the gods themselves,
And drove great Mars to faction. Shakespeare.
MISSIONARY. n. f. [missionaire, French.] One sent to propagate religion.
You mention the presbyterian missionary, who hath been persecuted for his religion. Swift.
Like mighty missioner you come,
Ad partes infidelium. Dryden.
MISSIVE. adj. [missive, French.]
1. Such as may be sent.
The king grants a licence under the great seal, called a congé d'essire, to elect the person he has nominated by his letters missive. Ayliffe's Purgeon.
2. Used at distance.
In vain with darts a distant war they try,
Short, and more short, the missive weapons fly. Dryden.
MISSIVE. n. f. [missive, French.]
1. A letter sent: it is retained in Scotland in that sense.
Great aids came in to him; partly upon missions, and partly voluntaries from many parts. Bacon's Henry VII.
2. A messenger.
Rising in Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters; and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience. Shakespeare.
While wrapt in the wonder of it came missions from the king, who all hail'd me thence of Cayder. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
MISSIVE. v. a. [mis and spoke.] To speak wrong.
It is not so; thou hast misspoke, misheard;
Tell o'er thy tale again. Shakespeare, King Lear.
A mother delights to hear
Her early child misspeak half-utter'd words. Dante.
MIST. n. f. [mist, Saxon.]
1. A low thin cloud; a small thin rain not perceived in single drops.
Old Chaucer, like the morning star,
To us discovers day from far;
His light those mists and clouds dissolv'd
Which our dark nation long involv'd.
And mists condens'd to clouds obscure the sky. Dante.
And clouds dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. Reynolds.
As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend to that height, in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Grew.
But hovering mists around his brows are spread,
And night with sable shades involves his head. Dryden.
A cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.
2. Any thing that dims or darkens.
My peoples eyes were once blinded with such mists of su-picion, they are soon misled into the most desperate actions.
King Charles.
His passion cast a mist before his sense,
And either made or magnify'd th' offence. Dryden.
To MIST. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloud; to cover with a vapour or steam.
Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then the lives. Shakespeare, King Lear.
MISTAKABLE. adj. [from mistake.] Liable to be conceived wrong.
It is not strange to see the difference of a third part in so large an account, if we consider how differently they are set forth in minor and less mistakable numbers. Brown.
To

MIS

To MISTAKE. v. a. [mis and take.] To conceive wrong; to take something for that which it is not.
The towns, neither of the one side nor the other, willingly opening their gates to strangers, nor strangers willingly entering for fear of being mistaken. Sidney.
These did truly apprehend a great affinity between their practice of invocation of saints and the heathen idolatry, or else there was no danger one should be mistaken for the other.
Stillington.
This if neglected will make the reader very much mistake, and misunderstand his meaning, and render the sense very perplexed. Locke.
Fancy passes for knowledge, and what is prettily said is mistaken for solid. Locke.
Fools into the notion fall.
That vice or virtue there is none at all:
Ask your own heart, and nothing is so plain,
'Tis to mistake them costs the time and pain. Pope.
To MISTAKE. v. n. To err; not to judge right.
Seeing God found folly in his angels; mens judgments, which inhabit these houses of clay, cannot be without their mistakings. Keble's Hymn of the World.
Seldom any one mistakes in his names of simple ideas, or applies the name red to the idea green. Locke.
Servants mistake, and sometimes occasion misunderstanding-ing, among friends. Swift.
MISTAKE. pret. and part. pass. of mistake for mistaken, and so retained in Scotland.
This dagger hath mistaken; for lo! the sheath
Lies empty on the back of Mountague,
The point misshated in my daughter's bosom. Shakespeare.
To be MISTAKEN. To err.
England is so idly king'd.
—You are too much mistaken in this king:
Question, your grace, the late ambassadors,
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution. Shakespeare, Henry V.
Mistaken Brutus thought to break their yoke,
But cut the bond of union with that stroke. Waller.
MISTAKE. n. f. [from the verb.] Misconception; error.
He never shall find out fit mate; but such As some misfortune brings him, or mistake. Milton.
Infallibility is an absolute security of the understanding from all possibility of mistake in what it believes. Tillotson.
Those errors are not to be charged upon religion, which proceed either from the want of religion, or superstitious mistakes about it. Bentley's Sermons.
MISTAKINGLY. adv. [from mistaking.] Erroneously; falsely.
The error is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall which does indeed belong to the object. Boyle on Colours.
To MISTAKE. v. a. [mis and tate.] To state wrong.
They mistake the question, when they talk of preling ceremonies. Bishop Sanderson.
To MISTAKE. v. a. [mis and teach.] To teach wrong.
Such guides shall be set over the several congregations as will be sure to mistake them. Bishop Sanderson.
The extravagances of the lowest life are the more consummate disorders of a mistake or neglected youth.
L'Estrange's Fables.
To MISTAKE. v. a. [mis and tell.] To tell unfaithfully or inaccurately.
To MISTAKE. v. a. [mis and temper.] To temper ill; to disorder.
This inundation of mistaken humour
Rets by you only to be qualified. Shakespeare, King John.
MISTAKE. adj. [from mistake, trade, French.] What mistake, what kind of.
The redcross knight toward him crossed fast,
To weet what mistake might was so dismay'd,
There him he finds all gentlest and agast. Spenser.
To MISTAKE. v. a. [mis and tem.] To term erroneously.
Hence banished, is banish'd from the world;
And world exil'd is death. That banished
Is death mistaken. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
To MISTAKE. v. a. [mis and think.] To think ill; to think wrong.
How will the country, for these woful chances,
Mistaken the king, and not be satisfy'd. Shakespeare.
We, the greatest, are mistaken
For things that others do. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
Thoughts! which how found they harbour in thy breast,
Adam! Mistaken of her to thee so dear? Milton.
To MISTAKE. v. a. [mis and time.] Not to time right; not to adapt properly with regard to time.
MISTINESS. n. f. [from missy.] Cloudiness; state of being overcast.
The speedy depredation of air upon watry moisture, and version of the same into air, appeareth in the sudden vanishing of vapours from glass, or the blade of a sword, such as doth not at all detain or imbibe the moisture, for the mistiness scattereth immediately. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 91.

MIS

MISTION. n. f. [from missus, Latin.] The state of being mingled.
In animals many actions are mixt, and depend upon their living form as well as that of mision, and though they wholly seem to retain unto the body, depart upon disunion. Brown.
Both bodies do, by the new texture resulting from their mision, produce colour. Boyle on Colours.
MISTLETOE. n. f. [myrtille, Saxon; mistle, Danish, birds-lime, and ran, a twig.] A plant.
The flower of the mistletoe consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a bafon, divided into four parts, and beset with warts; the ovary which is produced in the female flowers is placed in a remote part of the plant from the male flowers, and consists of four shorter leaves; this becomes a round berry full of a glutinous substance, inclosing a plain heart-shaped seed: this plant is always produced from feed, and is not to be cultivated in the earth, as most other plants, but will always grow upon trees; from whence the ancients accounted it a super-plaut, who thought it to be an excrescence on the tree without the seed being previously lodged there, which opinion is now generally confuted. The manner of its propagation is as follows, viz. the mistletoe thrush, which feeds upon the berries of this plant in winter when it is ripe, doth open the seed from tree to tree; for the viscous part of the berry, which immediately surrounds the seed, doth sometimes fasten it to the outward part of the bird's beak, which, to get disengaged of, he strikes his beak at the branches of a neighbouring tree, and so leaves the seed sticking by this vis-cous matter to the bark, which, if it lights upon a smooth part of the tree, will fasten itself, and the following winter put out and grow: the trees which this plant doth most readily take upon are the apple, the ash, and some other smooth kind trees: it is observable, that whenever a branch of an oak tree hath any of these plants growing upon it, it is cut off, and preferred by the curious in their collections of natural curiosities. Milner.
If snow do continue, sheepe hardly that fare
Crave mistle and ivie for them for to spare. Tusser's Husb.
A barren and detested vale, you see it is:
The trees, though Summer, yet forlorn and lean, O'ercome with moss, and baleful mistle. Shakespeare.
Mistletoe groweth chiefly upon crab trees, apple trees, sometimes upon hazels, and rarely upon oaks; the mistletoe whereof is counted very medicinal: it is ever green Winter and Summer, and beareth a white glittering berry; and it is a plant utterly differing from the plant upon which it groweth. Bacon.
All your temples strow
With laurel green, and sacred mistletoe. Gay's Trivia.
MISTLIKE. adj. [mist and like.] Resembling a mist.
Good Romeo, hide thyself.
—Not I, unless the breath of heart-sick groans, Mistlike in fold me from the reach of eyes. Shakespeare.
MISTOLD, particip. pass. of mistake.
MISTOK, particip. pass. of mistake.
Look nymphs, and shepherds look,
What sudden blaze of majesty,
Too divine to be mistake. Milton.
MISTRESS. n. f. [maistrisse, maistrisse, French.]
1. A woman who governs: correlative to subject or to servant.
Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out,
Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon
To stand's auspicious mistress. Shakespeare, King Lear.
Let us prepare
Some welcome for the mistress of the house. Shakespeare.
Like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head and perish. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
He'll make your Paris louvre shake for it,
Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe. Shakespeare.
I will not charn my tongue; I'm bound to speak;
My mistress here lies murder'd in her bed. Shakespeare, Othello.
The late queen's gentlewoman! a knight's daughter!
To be her mistress mistress! the queen's queen. Shakespeare.
Rome now is mistress of the whole world, sea and land, to either pole. Benj. Johnson's Catiline.
Wonder not, foreign mistress! if perhaps Thou can't, who art sole wonder; much less arm
Thy looks, the heav'n of mildness, with disdain. Milton.
Those who assert the lunar orb presides
O'er humid bodies, and the ocean guides;
Whose waves obsequious ebb, or swelling run
With the declining or encreasing moon;
With reason seem her empire to maintain
As mistress of the rivers and the main.
What a miserable spectacle, for a nation that had been mistress at sea so long!
A woman who possesses faculties uninjured.
There had the enjoyed herself while she was mistress of herself, and had no other thoughts but such as might arise out of quiet senses. Sidney, b. ii.

MIS

Agnes come, that shall your bounty hear,
Will think you misfrets of the Indies were;
Though freighter bounds your fortune did confine,
In your large heart was found a wealthy mine. Waller.

3. A woman skilled in any thing.
A letter desires all young wives to make themselves mis- trifles of Wingate's Arithmetic. Addison's Spect. No. 92.

4. A woman teacher.
Erect publick schools, provided with the best and ablest masters and misstresses. Swift.

5. A woman beloved and courted.
They would not suffer the prince to confer with, or very rarely to see, his misstress, whom they pretended he should forthwith marry. Clarendon.

Nice honour still engages to requite
False misstress and proud with slight for flight. Granville.

6. A term of contemptuous address.
Look you, pale misstress,
Do you perceive the ghastness of her eye? Shakespeare.

7. A whore; a concubine.
MISTRUST. n. f. [mis and trust.] Diffidence; suspicion; want of confidence.
He needs not our mistrust, since he delivers
Our offices, and what we have to do,
To the direction just. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Not then mistrust, but tender love, enjoins
That I should mind thee oft; and mind thou me! Milton.

MISTRUST. v. a. [mis and trust.] To suspect; to doubt;
to regard with diffidence.
Will any man alledge those mentioned human infirmities, as reasons why these things should be mistrusted or doubted
of. Hooker, b. ii.

By a divine instinct, mens minds mistrust
Enfuing danger; as by proof we see,
The waters swell before a boisterous storm. Shakespeare.
Fate her own book mistrusted at the sight,
On that side war, on this a single fight. Cowley.

The relation of a Spartan youth, that suffered a fox concealed under his robe to tear out his bowels, is mistrusted by men of business. Brown.

The generous train complies,
Nor fraud mistrusts in virtue's fair disguise. Pope's Odyssey.

MISTRUSTFUL. adj. [mistrust and full.] Diffident; doubting.
I hold it cowardice
To rest mistrustful, where a noble heart
Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love. Shakespeare.
Here the mistrustful fowl no harm suspects,
So safe are all things which our king protects. Waller.

MISTRUSTFULNESS. n. f. [from mistrustful.] Diffidence; doubt.
Without him I found a weakness, and a mistrustfulness of myself, as one strayed from his best strength, when at any time I mist him. Sidney, b. ii.

MISTRUSTFULLY. adv. [from mistrustful.] With suspicion; with mistrust.

MISTRUSTLESS. adj. [from mistrust.] Confident; unsuspecting.
Where he doth in firearm mistrustless play,
Vail'd with night's robe, they stalk the shore abroad. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

MISTY. adj. [from mist.]
1. Clouded; overpread with mists.
The morrow fair with purple beams
Dispers'd the shadows of the misty night. Fairy Queen.
Loud howling wolves arouse the jades,
That drag the tragick melancholy night;
Who with their drowly, slow, and flagging wings
Clip dead mens graves; and from their misty jaws
Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air. Shakespeare.
Parents overprize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection which alter the appearance, as things seem bigger in misty mornings. Wotton.
Now smoaks with show'rs the misty mountain ground,
And floated fields lie undisturbed round. Pope.

2. Obscure; dark; not plain.
TO MISUNDERSTAND. v. a. [mis and understand.] To mis-conceive; to mistake.
The words of Tertullian, as they are by them alledged, are misunderstood. Hooker, b. ii.
He failed in distinguishing these two regions, both called Eden, and he altogether misunderstood two of the four rivers.
Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

In vain do men take sanctuary in such misunderstood expressions as these; and from a false persuasion that they cannot reform their lives never go about it. South.

This if it be neglected, will make the reader very much mistake and misunderstand his meaning. Locke.

Were they only designed to instruct the three succeeding generations, they are in no danger of being misunderstood.
Addison on ancient Medals.

MIT

The example of a good man is the best direction we can follow in the performance of our duty; the most exact rules and precepts are subject to be misunderstood; some at least will mistake their meaning. Rogers's Sermon.

MISUNDERSTANDING. n. f. [from misunderstood.]
1. Difference; disagreement.
There is a great misunderstanding betwixt the corpulent philosophers and the chemists. Boyle.

tempt, imputing it to misunderstanding or fear. Bacon.

MISUSE. n. f. [from misuse.]
1. Abuse; ill use.
2. Bad treatment.
TO MISUSE. v. a. [misuse, Fr. mis and use.] To treat or use improperly; to abuse.
You misuse the reverence of your place,
As a false favourite doth his prince's name
In deeds dishon'able. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
It hath been their custom shamefully to misuse the fervent zeal of men to religious arms, by converting the monies that have been levied for such wars to their own services. Raleigh.
Bacchus, that first from out the purple grape Crush'd the sweet poison of misused wine. Milton.
Machiavel makes it appear, that the weakness of Italy, which was once so strong, was caused by the corrupt practices of the papacy, in depraving and misusing religion. South's Sermon.

MISUSE. n. f. [from the verb.] Bad use; bad treatment.
Upon whose dead corpse there was such misuse,
Such beastly, shameless transformation,
By those Wellwomen done, as may not be Without much shame retold. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
How much names taken for things mislead the understanding, the attentive reading of philosophical writers would discover, and that in words little suspected of any such misuse. Locke.

We have reason to humble ourselves before God by fasting and prayer, lest he should punish the misuse of our mercies, by stopping the course of them. Atterbury's Sermon.

TO MISWEAVE. v. n. [mis and weave.] To misjudge; to distrust.
Latter times things more unknown shall show,
Why then should witless man so much misweave. Fa. Q.

TO MISWEAVE. v. n. [mis and weave.] To go wrong.
Every thing begun with reason,
Will come by ready means unto his end;
But things misconceived must needs misweave. Haberd.
In this maze still wand'ring and misweaving,
For heaven decreed to conceal the fame,
To make the miscreant more to feel his shame. Fairfax.

MISY. n. f. A kind of mineral.
Misy contains no cupreous vitriol but only that of iron: it is a very beautiful mineral, of a fine bright yellow colour, and of a loose and friable fracture, and much resembles the golden marcasites. Hill's Nat. Med.

MITE. n. f. [mite, French; myt, Dutch; mita, Lat.]
1. A small insect found in cheese or corn; a weevil.
Virginity breeds mite, much like a cheese, consumes itself to the very paring, and so dies with feeding its own stomach.
Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

The polish'd glass, whose small convex
Enlarges to ten millions of degrees,
The mite invisible else, of nature's hand Least animal. Philips.
The idea of two is as distinct from the idea of three, as the magnitude of the whole earth is from that of a mite. Locke.

2. The twentieth part of a grain.
The Seville piece of eight contains thirteen pennyweight twenty-one grains and fifteen mites, of which there are twenty in the grain, of sterling silver, and is in value forty-three English pence and eleven hundredths of a penny. Arbuthnot.

3. Any thing proverbially small; the third part of a farthing.
Though any man's corn they do bite,
They will not allow him a mite. Tusser's Husb.
Are you defrauded, when he feeds the poor,
Our mite decreases nothing of your store. Dryden.
Did I e'er my mite withhold
From the impotent and old. Swift's Miscel.

4. A small particle.
Put blue-bottles into an ant-hill they will be flain'd with red, because the ants thrust in their stings, and infill into them a small mite of their stinging liquor, which hath the same effect as oil of vitriol. Ray on Creation.

MITELLA. n. f. A plant.
The mitella hath a perennial root; the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, and is divided into five parts; the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose; the ovary

MIX

ovary becomes a roundish fruit, which terminates in a point, gaping at the top, in form of a bishop's mitre, and full of roundish seeds. Miller.

MITHRIDATE. n. f. [mitridate, Fr.]
Mithridate is one of the capital medicines of the shops, consisting of a great number of ingredients, and has its name from its inventor Mithridates, king of Pontus. Quincy.

But you of learning and religion,
And virtue, and such ingredients, have made
A mitridate, whose operation
Keeps off, or cures, what can be done or said. Donne.

MITRIGATE. n. f. [mitrigo, Latin.]
The flower of the mitridate consists of four leaves placed in form of a cross, out of whose cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a smooth roundish fruit, having commonly a leafy border, and slit on the upper side, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition placed obliquely with respect to the valves, and furnished with smooth roundish seeds; to which may be added the undivided leaves, which distinguish it from cressis. Miller.

MITIGANT. adj. [mitigans, Lat.] Lenient; lenitive.
TO MITIGATE. v. a. [mitigo, Lat. mitiger, Fr.]
1. To soften; to make less rigorous.
We could greatly wish, that the rigour of their opinion were allayed and mitigated. Hooker, b. v.

2. To alleviate; to make mild; to assuage.
Mithras are master'd by advice direct,
And counsel mitigates the greatest smart. Fairy Queen.
All it can do, is to devise how that which must be endured may be mitigated, and the inconveniences thereof counter-poised as near as may be, that, when the best things are not possible, the best may be made of those that are. Hooker.

3. To mollify; to make less severe.
I undertook
Before thee: and, not repenting, this obtain
Of right, that I may mitigate their doom,
On me deriv'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

4. To cool; to moderate.
A man has frequent opportunity of mitigating the fierce-ness of a party, of softening the envious, quieting the angry, and rectifying the prejudiced. Addison's Spectator.

MITIGATION. n. f. [mitigatio, Lat. mitigatio, Fr. from miti- gare.] Abatement of any thing penal, harsh, or painful.
The king would not have one penny abated of that granted to him by parliament, because it might encourage other countries to pray the like release or mitigation. Bacon.
They caused divers subjects to be indicted of sundry crimes; and when the bills were found they committed them, and suffered them to languish long in prison, to extort from them great fines and ransoms, which they termed compositions and mitigations. Bacon's Henry VII.

MITRE. n. f. [mitra, Fr. mitra, Latin.]
1. An ornament for the head.
Nor Pantheus, thee, thy mitre not the bands
Of awful Phœbus, fav'd from impious hands. Dryden.

2. A kind of episcopal crown.
Bishopricks or burning, mitres or faggots, have been the rewards of different persons, according as they pronounced these consecrated syllables, or not. Watts.

MITRE. n. f. [mitra, Fr. mitra, Latin.] A kind of joining two boards together. Miller.

MITRED. adj. [mitre, Fr. from mitra.] Adorned with a mitre.
Shall the loud herald our success relate,
Or mitred priests appoint the solemn day? Prior.
Mitred abbots, among us, were those that were exempt from the diocesan's jurisdiction, as having within their own precincts episcopal authority, and being lords in parliament were called abbots sovereign. Atterbury's Sermon.

MITTENT. adj. [mittens, Lat.] Sending forth; emitting.
The fluxion proceedeth from humours peccant in quantity or quality, thrust forth by the part mittent upon the inferior weak parts. Wise's Surgery.

MITTENS. n. f. [mittaines, French.]
1. Coarse gloves for the winter.
December must be exprest with a horrid aspect, as also January clad in Irish ruff, holding in furred mittens the sign of Capricorn. Peacock on Drawing.

2. Gloves that cover the arm without covering the fingers.
3. To handle one without mittens. To use one roughly. A low phrase. Ains.

MITTIMUS. [Latin.] A warrant by which a justice commits an offender to prison.
TO MIX. v. a. [mixen, Dutch; miscio, Latin.]
1. To unite different bodies into one mass; to put various ingredients together.
Ephraim hath mixed himself among the people. Hof. vii. 8.
A mixed multitude went up with them, and flocks and herds. Exod. xii. 38.
He sent out of his mouth a blast of fire, and out of his lips a flaming breath, and out of his tongue he cast out sparks and tempests; and they were all mixt together. 2 Ezech.

2. To form of different faiths.

MOB

I have chosen an argument, mixt of religious and civil considerations; and likewise mixt between contemplative and active. Bacon's holy War.

3. To join; to mingle.
Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear;
This is the English not the Turkish court. Shakespeare.

MIXEN. n. f. [mixen, Saxon.] A dunghill; a laystall.
MIXTION. n. f. [mixtion, Fr. from mix.] Mixture; confusion of one body with another.
Others perceiving this rule to fall short, have pieced it out by the mixture of vacuity among bodies, believing it is that which makes one rarer than another. Digby on Bodies.
Though we want a proper name, yet are they not to be lightly past over as elementary or subterraneous mixtions.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

MIXTLY. adv. [from mix.] With coalition of different parts into one.
MIXTURE. n. f. [mixture, Latin.]
1. The act of mixing; the state of being mixed.
O happy mixture, wherein things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as well as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us! Hooker, b. v.
Those liquors are expelled out of the body which, by their mixture, convert the aliment into an animal liquid. Arbuth.
I, by baleful furies led,
With monstrous mixture stain'd my mother's bed. Pope.

2. A mass formed by mingled ingredients.
Come vial—What if this mixture do not work at all?
Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

3. That which is added and mixed.
Neither can God himself be otherwise understood, than as a mind free and disentangled from all corporeal mixtures, perceiving and moving all things. Stillingfleet.
Cicero doubts whether it were possible for a community to exist, that had not a prevailing mixture of piety in its constitution. Addison's Freeholder, No. 29.
While we live in this world, where good and bad men are blended together, and where there is also a mixture of good and evil widely distributed by God, to serve the ends of his providence. Atterbury's Sermon.

MIXMAZE. n. f. [A cant word, formed from maze by redu- plication.] A maze; a labyrinth.
Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books, and the clue to lead them through the mixmaze of variety of opinions and authors to truth. Locke.

MIXZEN. n. f. [mixzen, Dutch.]
The mixzen is a mast in the stern or back back of a ship:
in some large ships there are two such masts, that standing next the main mast is called the main mixzen, and the other near the poop the bonaventure mixzen: the length of a mix- zen mast is half that of the main mast, or the height of it is the same with that of the maintop mast from the quarterdeck, and the length of the mixzen topmast is half that. Bail.
A commander at sea had his leg fractured by the fall of his mixzen topmast. Wise's Surgery.

MIXZY. n. f. A bog; a quagmire. Ains.

MO. adj. [ma, Saxon; mae, Scottish.] Making greater number; more.
Calliope and muses mo,
Soon as your oaken pipe begins to found Their ivory lutes lay by.
With oxbows and oxyokes, with other things mo,
For oxtrem and horstrem in plough for to go. Tusser.

MO. adv. Further; longer.
Sing no more ditties, sing no mo
Of dumps so dull and heavy;
The frauds of men were ever so,
Since Summer was first leafy. Shakespeare.

TO MOAN. v. a. [from manan, Saxon, to grieve.] To lament; to deplore.
The generous hand redressive search'd
Into the horrors of the gloomy jail,
Unpitied and unheard, where misery moans. Thomson.

MOAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Lamentation; audible sorrow;
grief expressed in words or cries.
I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan to be abridg'd
From such a noble rate. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
The fresh stream ran by her, and murmur'd her moans;
The salt tears fell from her, and soft'ned the stones. Shak.
Sullen moans,
Hollow groans,
And cries of tortur'd ghosts. Pope's St. Cecilia.

MOAT. n. f. [moite, French, a mound; mota, low Latin.] A canal of water round a house or castle for defence.
16 Q

The cattle I found of good strength, having a great meat round about it, the work of a noble gentleman, of whose unthriftiness he had bought it. Sidney, b. ii.

The fortrefs thrice himself in person form'd;
Your valour bravely did th' assault sustain;
And fill'd the moats and ditches with the slain. Dryden.

No walls were yet, nor fence, nor mote, nor mound,
Nor drum was heard. Dryden's Ovid.

To MOAT. v. a. [moter, French, from the noun.] To surround with canals by way of defence.

I will presently to St. Luke's; there at the moated Grange resides this dejected Mariana. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

To MOBLE. v. a. [sometimes written mable, perhaps by a ludicrous allusion to the French je m'habille.] To dress grossly or inelegantly.

But who, oh! hath seen the mobled queen,
Run barefoot up and down. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

MOBBY. n. f. An American drink made of potatoes.

MOBILE. n. f. [mobile, French.] The populace; the rout; the mob.

Long experience has found it true of the unthinking mobile, that the closer they shut their eyes the wider they open their hands. South's Sermons.

The mobile are uneasy without a ruler, they are restless with one. L'Estrange's Fables.

MOBILITY. n. f. [mobilité, Fr. mobilitas, Latin.]

1. Nimbleness; activity.
2. Mobility is the power of being moved.

Locke.

Iron, having stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude. Wotton.

The present age hath attempted perpetual motions, whose revolutions might out-last the exemplary mobility, and out-measure time itself. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

The Romans had the advantage by the bulk of their ships, and the fleet of Antiochus in the swiftness and mobility of theirs, which served them in great stead in the flight. Arbuth.

You tell, it is ingenuit, active force,
Mobility, or native power to move Words, which mean nothing. Blackmore.

2. [In cant language.] The populace.

She singled you out with her eye as commander in chief of the mobility. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

3. Fickleness; inconstancy.

MOCHO-STONE. n. f. [from Mocha, therefore more properly Mocha-stone.]

Mocha-stones are nearly related to the agat kind, of a clear horny grey, with declinations representing mosses, shrubs, and branches, in black, brown, or red, in the substance of the stone. Woodward.

To MOCK. v. a. [moquer, French; moccio, Welsh.]

1. To deride; to laugh at; to ridicule.

All the regions
Do seemingly revolt; and who resist
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Many thousand widows,
Shall this his mock, mock out of their dear husbands;
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down. Shakespeare.

We'll dishorn the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor. Shakespeare.

Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings. Heb. xi.

I am as one mock'd of his neighbour, the just, upright man is mock'd to scorn. Job xii. 4.

2. To deride by imitation; to mimic in contempt.

I long, till Edward fall by war's mischance,
For mocking marriage with a dame of France. Shakespeare.

3. To defeat; to clude.

My father is gone into his grave,
And with his spirit sadly I survive,

MOC

To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out Rotten opinion. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. iii.

4. To fool; to tantalize; to play on contemptuously.

He will not
Mock us with his blest fight, then snatch him hence,
Soon we shall see our hope return. Milton's Par. Reg.

Why do I overlive?
Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
To deathless pain? Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

Heaven's fuller influence mocks our dazzl'd light,
Too great its brightness, and too strong its light. Prior.

To Mock. v. n. To make contemptuous sport.

Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
For now a time is come to mock at form. Shakespeare.

A stallion horse is as a mocking friend; he neigheth under every one. Echus. xxiii. 6.

A reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries. Eccl. xxii. 4.

After I have spoken, mock on.
When thou mockest, shall no man make thee ashamed? Job xxi. 3.

Mock. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Ridicule; act of contempt; sneer; gibe; gibe; flirt.

Tell the pleasant prince this mock of his Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones. Shakespeare, Henry V.

Oh, 'tis the spite of hell, the fiend's arch mock,
To tip a wanton, and suppoise her chaste. Shakespeare.

Fools make a mock at sin. Prov. xiv. 9.

What shall be the portion of those who have affronted God, derided his word, and made a mock of every thing that is sacred?

Colin makes mock at all her piteous smart,
A las! that Cicily might, had won his heart. Gay.

2. Imitation; mimicry.

Now reach a strain, my lute,
Above her mock, or be for ever mute. Crowfoot.

It is as the air, invulnerable;
And our vain blows malicious mockery. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

5. Imitation; counterfeit appearance; vain show.

To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion,
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shakespeare.

What though no friends in fable weeds appear,
Grieve for an hour, perhaps, then mourn a year,
And bear about the mockery of woe
To midnight dances. Pope's Mifol.

MOCKING-BIRD. n. f. [mocking and bird.] An American bird, which imitates the note of other birds.

MOCKINGLY. adv. [from mockery.] In contempt; petulantly; with insult. Mocking-

MOD

MOCKING-STOCK. n. f. [mocking and stock.] A but for meritment.

MODAL. adj. [modale, Fr. modalis, Latin.] Relating to the form or mode, not the essence.

When we speak of faculties of the soul, we assert not with the schools their real distinction from it, but only a modal diversity. Glauville's Scipio.

MODALITY. n. f. [from modal.] Accidental difference; modal accident.

The motions of the mouth by which the voice is discriminated, are the natural elements of speech; and the application of them in their several compositions, or words made of them, to signify things, or the modalities of things, and so to serve for communication of notions, is artificial. Holder.

MODE. n. f. [mode, Fr. modus, Latin.]

1. Form; external variety; accidental discrimination; accident.

A mode is that which cannot subsist in and of itself, but is always effected as belonging to, and subsisting by, the help of some substance, which, for that reason, is called its subject.

Few allow mode to be called a being in the same perfect sense as a substance is, and some modes have evidently more of real entity than others. Watts's Logic.

2. Gradation; degree.

What modes of fight betwixt each wide extreme,
The mole's dim curtain, and the linx's beam;
Of smell, the headlong lioness between,
And hound faggious on the tainted green. Pope.

3. Manner; method; form; fashion.

Our Saviour beheld
A table richly spread, in regal mode,
With dainties piled. Milton's Par. Reg. b. ii.

The duty itself being resolved upon, the mode of doing it may easily be found. Taylor's Guide to a Penitent.

4. State; appearance.

My death
Changes the mode; for what in me was purchas'd, Falls upon thee in a much fairer sort,
For thou the garland wear'st successively. Shakespeare.

5. [Mode, French.] Fashion; custom.

There are certain garbs and modes of speaking, which vary with the times; the fashion of our clothes being not more subject to alteration than that of our speech. Denham.

We are to prefer the blessings of Providence before the splendid curiosities of mode and imagination. L'Estrange.

They were invited from all parts; and the favour of learning was the humour and mode of the age. Temple.

As we see on coins the different faces of persons, we see too their different habits and dresses, according to the mode that prevailed. Addison on ancient Medals.

If faith itself has different dresses worn,
What wonder modes in wit should take their turn? Pope.

MODEL. n. f. [modele, French; modulus, Latin.]

1. A representation in miniature of something made or done.

I'll draw the form and model of our battle;
Limit each leader to his several charge,
And part in just proportion our small strength. Shakespeare.

You have the models of several ancient temples, though the temples and the gods are perished. Addison.

2. A copy to be imitated.

A fault it would be if some king should build his mansion-house by the model of Solomon's palace. Hooker, b. v.

They cannot see sin in those means they use, with intent to reform to their models what they call religion. K. Charles.

3. A mould; any thing which shows or gives the shape of that which it includes.

Nothing can we call our own but death;
And that small model of the barren earth,
Which serves as paste and cover to our bones. Shakespeare.

Standard; that by which any thing is measured.

As he who preumes steps into the throne of God, so he that despairs measures providence by his own little contracted model. South's Sermons.

5. In Shakespeare it seems to have two unexampl'd senses. Something formed or produced.

I have commended to his goodness
The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter. Shakespeare.

6. Something small and diminutive; which, perhaps, is likewise the meaning of the example affixed to the third sense.

England! model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart. Shakespeare.

To MODEL. v. a. [modeler, French.] To plan; to shape; to mould; to form; to delineate.

When they come to model heav'n,
And calculate the stars, how they will wield
The mighty frame. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

The government is modelled after the same manner with that of the Cantons, as much as so small a community can imitate those of so large an extent. Addison on Italy.

MOD

MODELLER. n. f. [from model.] Planner; schemer; contriver.

Our great modellers of gardens have their magazines of plants to dispose of. Specht. N^o. 414.

MODERATE. adj. [moderatus, Lat. moderatus, Fr.]

1. Temperate; not excessive.

Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating, but paings of the belly are with an insatiable man. Ecclus. xxxi. 20.

2. Not hot of temper.

A number of moderate members managed with so much art as to obtain a majority, in a thin house, for passing a vote, that the king's concessions were a ground for a future settlement. Swift.

3. Not luxurious; not expensive.

There's not so much left as to furnish out
A moderate table. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.

4. Not extreme in opinion; not fanguine in a tenet.

These are tenets which the moderatest of the Romanists will not venture to affirm. Smalbridge.

Fix'd to one part, but moderate to the rest. Pope.

5. Placed between extremes; holding the mean.

Quietly consider the trial that hath been thus long had of both kinds of reformation; as well this moderate kind, which the church of England hath taken, as that other more extreme and rigorous, which certain churches elsewhere have better liked. Hooker, b. iv.

6. Of the middle rate.

More moderate gifts might have prolong'd his date,
Too early fitted for a better state. Dryden.

To MODERATE. v. a. [moderor, Latin; moderor, Fr.]

1. To regulate; to restrain; to still; to pacify; to quiet; to repress.

With equal measure she did moderate
The strong extremities of their rage. Spenser.

By its affrighting quality it moderates the relaxing quality of warm water. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To make temperate.

Ye swarthy nations of the torrid zone,
How well to you is this great bounty known?
For frequent gales from the wide ocean rise
To fan your air, and moderate your skies. Blackmore.

MODERATELY. adv. [from moderate.]

1. Temperately; mildly.
2. In a middle degree.

Each nymph but moderately fair,
Commands with no less rigor here. Waller.

Blood in a healthy state, when let out, its red part should congeal strongly and soon, in a mass moderately tough, and swim in the serum. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

MODERATENESS. n. f. [from moderate.] State of being moderate; temperateness.

MODERATION. n. f. [moderatio, Latin.]

1. Forbearance of extremity; the contrary temper to party violence; state of keeping a due mean betwixt extremes.

Was it the purpose of these churches, which abolished all popish ceremonies, to come back again to the middle point of evenness and moderation? Hooker, b. iv.

A zeal in things pertaining to God, according to knowledge, and yet duly tempered with candor and prudence, is the true notion of that much talked of, much misunderstood virtue, moderation. Atterbury's Sermons.

In moderation placing all my glory,
While totes call me whig, and whigs a tory. Pope.

2. Calmness of mind; equanimity. [moderation, Fr.]

Equally inur'd
By moderation either state to bear, Prosperous, or adverse. Milt. Par. Lost, b. xi.

Frugality in expense. Ainsworth.

MODERATOR. n. f. [moderator, Lat. moderator, Fr.]

1. The person or thing that calms or restrains.

Angling was, after tedious study, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, and a procurer of contentedness. Waller's Angler.

2. One who presides in a disputation, to restrain the contending parties from indecency, and confine them to the question.

Sometimes the moderator is more troublesome than the actor.

How does Philopolis feasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long-practised moderator? More.

The first person who speaks when the court is set, opens the case to the judge, chairman, or moderator of the assembly, and gives his own reasons for his opinion. Watts.

MODERN. n. f. [moderne, Fr. from modernus, low Latin, verbis modi, modernus, ut die diurnus. Vel potius ab adverbio modi, modernus, ut die diurnus. Ainsf.]

1. Late; recent; not ancient; not antique.

Some of the ancient, and likewise divers of the modern writers, that have laboured in natural magick, have noted a sympathy between the sun and certain herbs. Bacon.

The glorious parallels then downward bring To modern wonders, and to Britain's king. Prior.

During the last four years, by a modest computation, there have been brought into Great Britain six millions sterling in bullion.

MODESTLY. adv. [from modest.]
1. Not arrogantly; not presumptuously.
Though learn'd, well bred; and though well bred, sincere.

Pope.
I may modestly conclude, that whatever errors there may be in this play, there are not those which have been objected to it. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

First he modestly conjectures,
His pupil might be tir'd with lectures:
Which help'd to mortify his pride,
Yet gave him not the heart to chide. Swift's Miscel.

2. Not impudently; not forwardly; with modesty.
I, your glass,
Will modestly discover to yourself
That of yourself, which yet you know not of. Shakespeare.

A lord will hear you play;
But I am doubtful of your modesties,
Left over eying of his odd behaviour,
You break into some merry passion.

4. Chastity; purity of manners.
Would you not swear,
All you that see her, that she were a maid,
By these exterior shews? But she is more,
Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty.

Shakespeare.
Of the general character of women, which is modesty, he has taken a most becoming care; for his amorous expressions go no farther than virtue may allow.

Dryden.
Talk not to a lady in a way that modesty will not permit her to answer.

MODESTY-PIECE. n. f.
A narrow lace which runs along the upper part of the stays before, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. Addison's Guard. N° 118.

What modicum of wit he utters; his evasions have ears thus long. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cressida.

Though hard their fate,
A cruise of water, and an ear of corn,
Yet still they grudge'd that modicum. Dryden.

MOH

MODIFIABLE. adj. [from modify.] That may be diversified by accidental differences.

It appears to be more difficult to conceive a distinct, visible image in the uniform, invariable, essence of God, than in variously modifiable matter; but the manner how I see either will escapes my comprehension. Locke.

MODIFIABLE. adj. [from modify.] Diversifiable by various modes.

MODIFICATION. n. f. [modification, French.] The act of modifying any thing, or giving it new accidental differences of form or mode.

The chief of all signs is human voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, viz. the letters of the alphabet, formed by the several motions of the mouth. Holder's Elements of Speech.

The phenomena of colours in refracted or reflected light, are not caused by new modifications of the light variously impressed, according to the various terminations of the light and shadow. Newton's Opticks.

If these powers of cogitation, volition and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion and modification of it, it necessarily follows that they proceed from some cognitive substance, some incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call spirit. Beattie.

To MODIFY. v. a. [modifier, French.]
1. To change the form or accidents of any thing; to shape.
Yet there is that property in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words through the voluble motions of the organs, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder.

The middle parts of the broad beam of white light which fell upon the paper, did, without any confine of shadow to modify it, become coloured all over with one uniform colour, the colour being always the same in the middle of the paper as at the edges. Newton's Opticks.

2. To soften; to moderate.
After all this dancating and modifying upon the matter, there is hazard on the yielding side. L'Estrange.

Of his grace
He modifies his first severe decree,
The keener edge of battle to rebate. Dryden.

MODILLON. n. f. [French; modillus, Lat.]
Modillions, in architecture, are little brackets which are often set under the cornithian and composite orders, and serve to support the projecture of the former or drip; this part must be distinguished from the great model, which is the diameter of the pillar; for, as the proportion of an edifice in general depends on the diameter of the pillar, so the size and number of the modillions, as also the interval between them, ought to have due relation to the whole fabric. Harris.

The modillions or dentelli make a noble show by their graceful projections. Speilator, N° 415.

MODISH. adj. [from mode.] Fashionable; formed according to the reigning custom.

But you, perhaps, expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs, and wanton dances grac'd. Dryd.
Hypocrisy, at the fashionable end of the town, is very different from hypocrisy in the city; the modish hypocrite endeavours to appear more virtuous than he really is, the other kind of hypocrite more virtuous. Addison's Spect. N° 399.

MODISHLY. adv. [from modish.] Fashionably.
Young children should not be much perplexed about putting off their hats, and making legs modishly. Locke.

MODISHNESS. n. f. [from modish.] Affectation of the fashion.

To MODULATE. v. a. [modulator, Latin.] To form found to a certain key, or to certain notes.

The nose, lips, teeth, palate, jaw, tongue, weafan, lungs, muscles of the chest, diaphragm, and muscles of the belly, all serve to make or modulate the found. Grew's Opticks.

Could any person so modulate her voice as to deceive to many. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

Echo propagates around
Each charm of modulated found. Anon.

MODULATION. n. f. [from modulate; modulation, Fr.]
1. The act of forming any thing to certain proportion.

The number of the simple original minerals have not been rightly fixt: the matter of two or more kinds being mixed together, and by the different proportion and modulation of that matter variously diversified, have been reputed all different kinds. Woodward.

The speech, as it is a found resulting from the modulation of the air, has most affinity to the spirit, but, as it is uttered by the tongue, has immediate cognation with the body, and so is the fittest instrument to manage a commerce between the invisible powers of human souls clothed in flesh. Government of the Tongue.

2. Sound modulated; agreeable harmony.
Innumerable songsters, in the freshening shade,
Their modulations mix, mellifluous. Thomson's Spring.

Do all expect that you should rouse yourself. Shakespeare.
The father of a family or nation, that uses his servants like children, and advises with them in what concerns the commonwealth, and thereby is willingly obeyed by them, is what the schools mean by a monarch. Temple's Miscel.

2. One superior to the rest of the same kind.
The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.

With ease distinguish'd is the regal race,
One monarch wears an open, honest face;
Shap'd to his size, and godlike to behold,
His royal body shines with specks of gold. Dryden's Virg.

Return'd with dire remorseless sway,
The monarch savage rends the trembling prey. Pope's Odyssey.

3. President.
Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plump Bacchus, with pink eye,
In thy vats our cares be drown'd. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

MONARCHIAL. adj. [from monarch.] Suited to a monarch; regal; princely; imperial.
Satan, whom now transcendent glory rais'd
Above his fellows, with monarchal pride, Conscious of highest worth, unmov'd thus spake. Milton.

MONARCHICAL. adj. [monarchique, Fr. monarchique, from monarch.]
Vested in a single ruler.
That storks will only live in free states, is a pretty conceit to advance the opinion of popular policies, and from antipathies in nature to disparage monarchical government.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

The decretals resolve all into a monarchical power at Rome.
Baker's Reflections on Learning.

MON

To MO'NARCHISE. v. n. [from monarch.] To play the king.
Allowing him a breath, a little scene
To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks. Shakespeare.

MO'NARCHY. n. f. [monarchie, Fr. monarchie.]
1. The government of a single person.
While the monarchy flourished, there wanted not a protector. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Kingdom; empire.
I pass
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.
The first that there did greet my stranger soul,
Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Who cried aloud, What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence. Shakespeare.

This small inheritance
Contenteth me, and 's worth a monarchy. Shakespeare.

MONASTERY. n. f. [monasterie, Fr. monasterium, Lat.] House of religious retirement; convent. It is usually pronounced, and often written, manastrey.

Then courts of kings were held in high renown;
There, virgins honourable vows receiv'd,
But chaste as maids in manastries liv'd. Dryden.

In a manastrey your devotions cannot carry you so far toward the next world, as to make this life the light of you. Pope.

MONASTICK. adj. [monastique, Fr. monastique, Latin.] Religiously recluse; pertaining to a monk.
I drove my sutor to forswear the full stream of the world, and to live in a nook merely monastick. Shak. As you like it.

The filicious and hairy vests of the strictest orders of friars derive the institution of their monastick life from the example of John and Elias. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

When young, you led a life monastick,
And wore a vast ecclesiastick,
Now in your age you grow fantastick. Denham.

MONASTICALLY. adv. [from monastick.] Reclusely; in the manner of a monk.
I have a dozen years more to answer for, all monastically passed in this country of liberty and delight. Swift.

Shylock, we would have monies. Shakespeare.

I will give thee the worth of it in money. King, xxi. 2.
Wives the readiest helps
To betray heady husbands, rob the easy,
And lend the monies on return of lust. Benj. Johnson.

Money differs from uncoined silver, in that the quantity of silver in each piece of money is ascertained by the stamp it bears, which is a publick voucher. Locke.

My discourse to the hen-peck'd has produced many correspondents; such a discourse is of general use, and every married man's money. Addison's Spect. No. 482.

People are not obliged to receive any monies, except of their own coinage by a publick mint. Swift.

Those hucksters or money jobbers will be found necessary, if this brais money is made current in the exchequer. Swift.

MO'NEYBAG. n. f. [money and bag.] A large purse.
Look to my house; I am right loth to go;
There is some ill a brewing towards my rest,
For I did dream of moneybags to-night. Shakespeare.

My place was taken up by an ill-bred puppy, with a money- bag under each arm. Addison's Guard. No. 106.

MO'NEYED. adj. [from money.] Rich in money: often used in opposition to those who are possessed of lands.
Invite moneyed men to lend to the merchants, for the continuing and quickening of trade. Bacon's Essays.

If exportation will not balance importation, away must your silver go again, whether moneyed or not moneyed; for where goods do not, silver must pay for the commodities you spend. Locke.

Several turned their money into those funds, merchants as well as other moneyed men. Swift.

With these measures fell in all monied men; such as had raised vast sums by trading with stocks and funds, and lending upon great interest. Swift.

weigh the loss by bad rents received out of lands in moneyless time. Swift.

MO'NEYMATTER. n. f. [money and matter.] Account of debtor and creditor.
What if you and I Nick should enquire how money matters stand between us? Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

MO'NEYSCHREIVER. n. f. [money and scribe.] One who raises money for others.
Suppose a young unexperienced man in the hands of money- schreivers; such fellows are like your wire-drawing mills, if they get hold of a man's finger, they will pull in his whole body at last. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

MO'NEYWORTH. n. f. [money and worth.] Something value-able; something that will bring money.
There is either money or moneyworth in all the controversies of life; for we live in a mercenary world, and it is the price of all things in it. L'Estrange.

MO'NGEL. n. f. [manze, Saxon, and corn.] Mixed corn:
as, wheat and rie.

MO'NGER. n. f. [mangere, Saxon, a trader; from mangan, Saxon, to trade.] A dealer; a seller. It is used after the name of any commodity to express a seller of that commodity: as, a fishmonger; and sometimes a medler in any thing:
as, a whoremonger; a newsmonger.

The impatient states monger
Could now contain himself no longer. Hudibras, p. iii.

MO'NGREL. adj. [mongre, from manze, Saxon, or mengen, to mix, Dutch.] Of a mixed breed.
This zealot
Is of a mongrel, divers kind,
Clerick before, and lay behind. Hudibras, p. i.

Ye mongrel work of heav'n, with human shap;
That have but just enough of sense to know
The master's voice. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,
But mongrel mischiefous. Dryden.

MON

Base, groveling, worthless wretches;
Mongrels in faction; poor faint-hearted traitors. Addison.
 His friendship still to few confin'd,
 Were always of the middling kind;
 No fools of rank, or mongrel breed,
 Who fain wou'd pass for lords indeed. Swift's Miscel.
MONIMENT. n. f. [from moneo, Lat.] It seems here to signify inscription.

Some others were driven and diftent
 Into great ingots and to wedges square,
 Some in round plates withouten moniment. Fairy Queen.
TO MONISH. v. a. [moneo, Lat.] To admonish, of which it is a contraction.

Monish him gently, which shall make him both willing to amend, and glad to go forward in love. Alchem's Schoolmaster.
MONISH. n. f. [from monish.] An admonisher; a monitor.
MONITION. n. f. [monitis, Latin; monition, Fr.]

1. Information; hint.
 We have no visible monition of the returns of any other periods, such as we have of the day, by successive light and darkness. Helder on Time.

2. Instruction; document.
 Unruly ambition is deaf, not only to the advice of friends, but to the counsels and monitions of reason itself. L'Estrange.

After sage monitions from his friends,
 His talents to employ for nobler ends,
 He turns to politics his dang'rous wit. Swift.

MONITOR. n. f. [Latin.] One who warns of faults, or informs of duty; one who gives useful hints. It is used of an upper scholar in a school commissioned by the master to look to the boys in his absence.

You need not be a monitor to the king; his learning is eminent; be but his scholar, and you are safe. Bacon.

It was the privilege of Adam innocent to have these notions also firm and untainted, to carry his monitor in his bosom, his law in his heart, and to have such a conscience as might be its own causer. South's Sermons.

We can but divine who it is that speaks; whether Perilus himself, or his friend and monitor, or a third person. Dryden.
 The pains that come from the necessities of nature, are monitors to us to beware of greater mischiefs. Locke.

MONITOR. adj. [monitoire, Fr. monitorius, Lat.] Conveying useful instruction; giving admonition.

Losses, miscarriages, and disappointments, are monitory and instructive. L'Estrange's Fables.

He is so taken up still, in spite of the monitory hint in my essay, with particular men, that he neglects mankind. Pepe.

MONITORY. n. f. Admonition; warning.

A king of Hungary took a bishop in battle, and kept him prisoner; whereupon the pope writ a monitory to him, for that he had broken the privilege of holy church. Bacon.

MONK. n. f. [from monach, Latin; μοναχός.] One of a religious community bound by vows to certain observances.

"I would prove the verity of certain words,
 Spoke by a holy monk. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Abdennecck, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became a melancholy Mahometan monk. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

The dromish monks, the corn and flame of manhood,
 Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,
 And nestle in their ancient hives again. Rousse.

Monks, in some respects, agree with regulars, as in the substantial vows of religion; but in other respects, monks and regulars differ; for that regulars, vows excepted, are not tied up to so strict a rule of life as monks are. Ayliffe's Paragon.

MONKEY. n. f. [monikin, a little man.]

1. An ape; a baboon; a jackanapes. An animal bearing some resemblance of man.

One of them shewed me a ring that he had of your daughter for a monkey: Tubal, it was my turquoise; I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys. Shakespeare.

More new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey. Shakespeare, As you like it.

Other creatures, as well as monkeys, destroy their young ones by senseless fondness. Locke on Education.

With glittering gold and sparkling gems they shine,
 But apes and monkeys are the gods within. Granville.

2. A word of contempt, or slight kindness.

This is the monkey's own giving out; she is persuaded I will marry her. Shakespeare's Othello.

Poor monkey! how wilt thou do for a father? Shakespeare.

MONKERY. n. f. [from monk.] The monastic life.

Neither do I meddle with their evangelical perfection of vows, nor the dangerous fervitude of their rash and impotent votaries, nor the inconveniences of their monkery. Hall.

MONKHOOD. n. f. [monk and hood.] The character of a monk.

He had left off his monkhood too, and was no longer obliged to them. Atterbury.

MONKISH. adj. [from monk.] Monastic; pertaining to monks; taught by monks.

Those publick charities are a greater ornament to this city than all its wealth, and do more real honour to the reformed religion, than redounds to the church of Rome from all those monkish and superstitious foundations of which she vainly boasts. Atterbury's Sermons.

MON

Rife, rife, Roocommon, see the Blenheim muse,
 The dull constraint of monkish rhyme refuse. Smith.

MONK'S-HOOD. n. f. A plant.

MONK'S-RHUBARB. n. f. A species of dock: its roots are used in medicine. Swiss.

MONOCHORD. n. f. [μόνος and χορδή.]

1. An instrument of one string: as, the trumpet marine. Har.

2. A kind of instrument anciently of singular use for the regulating of sounds: the ancients made use of it to determine the proportion of sounds to one another: when the chord was divided into two equal parts, so that the terms were as one to one, they called them unisons; but if they were as two to one, they called them octaves or diapasons; when they were as three to two, they called them fifths or diatesseras; if they were as four to three, they called them fourths or diatesseras; if the terms were as five to four, they called it diton, or a tierce major; but if the terms were as six to five, then they called it a demi-diton, or a tierce minor; and, lastly, if the terms were as twenty-four to twenty-five, they called it a deniton or dieze: the monochord being thus divided, was properly that which they called a system, of which there were many kinds, according to the different divisions of the monochord. Harri.

MONOCULAR. adj. [μόνος and oculus.] One-eyed; having only one eye.

He was well served who, going to cut down an ancient white hawthorn tree, which, because she budded before others, might be an occasion of superstition, had some of the prickles flew into his eyes, and made him monocular. Hawd.

Those of China repute all the rest of the world monocular. Clanville's Story.

MONODY. n. f. [μόνος and ᾠδή, Fr.] A poem sung by one person not in dialogue.

MONOGAMIST. n. f. [μόνος and γάμος; monogame, Fr.] One who disallows second marriages.

He gives you an account of himself, and of his returning from the country, in monologue; to which unnatural way of narration Terence is subject in all his plays. Dryden.

MONOMACHY. n. f. [μονομαχία; μόνος and μάχη.] A duel; a single combat.

MONOME. n. f. [monome, Fr.] In algebra, a quantity that has but one denomination or name; as, a, ab, aab, aaab. Harri.

MONOPETALOUS. adj. [monopetalos, Fr. μόνος and πέταλον.] It is used for such flowers as are formed out of one leaf, however they may be seemingly cut into many small ones, and those fall off together. Quincy.

MONOPOLIST. n. f. [monopoleur, French.] One who by engrossing or patent obtains the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

TO MONOPOLIZE. v. a. [μόνος and πωλεῖν; monopole, Fr.] To have the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

He has such a prodigious trade, that if there is not some stop put, he will monopolize; nobody will sell a yard of drape, or mercery ware, but himself. Arbutnot.

MONOPOLY. n. f. [μονοπωλία; monopole, Fr. μόνος and πωλήω.] The exclusive privilege of selling any thing.

Dost thou call me fool, boy?

—All thy other titles hast thou given away; that thou wast born with.

—Lords and great men will not let me; if I had a monopoly on't they would have part on't. Shakespeare, King Lear.

One of the most oppressive monopolies imaginable; all others can concern only something without us, but this fastens upon our nature, yea upon our reason. Go. of the Torque.

Shakespeare rather writ happily than knowingly and jolly; and Johnson, who by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, yet seemed to envy to posterity that knowledge, and to make a monopoly of his learning. Dryden's Jew.

MONOPROTE. n. f. [μόνος and πρωτεύω.] Is a noun used only in some one oblique case. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

MONOSYLLABLE. n. f. [monosyllable, Fr. μόνος and σύν.] A word of only one syllable.

It is so long it asks an hour to write it: I'll change it into Jove or Mars!

Or any other civil monosyllable,
 That will not tire my hand. Dryden's Cleomenes.

These,

MON

These, although not insensible how much our language was already over-stocked with monosyllables, yet, to save time and pains, introduced that barbarous custom of abbreviating words, to fit them to the measure of their verses. Swift.

Monosyllable lines, unless artfully managed, are stiff or languishing; but may be beautiful to express melancholy. Pepe.

MONOSYLLABLE. adj. [monosyllable, Fr. from monosyllable.] Consisting of one syllable.

Nine tapers, if rightly spell'd,
 Into one man are monosyllabled. Cleaveland.

MONOTONY. n. f. [μόνος and ῥυθμός; monotonie, Fr.] Uniformity of sound; want of variety in cadence.

I could object to the repetition of the same rhymes within four lines of each other as tiresome to the ear through their monotony. Pepe's Letters.

MONSIEUR. n. f. [French.] A term of reproach for a Frenchman.

A Frenchman his companion;
 An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much loves
 A Gallian girl. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

MONSOON. n. f. [monsoon, monsoon, Fr.]

Monsoons are shifting trade winds in the East Indian ocean, which blow periodically; some for half a year one way, others but for three months; and then shift, and blow for six or three months directly contrary. Harri.

The monsoons and trade winds are constant and periodical even to the thirtieth degree of latitude all around the globe, and seldom transgress or fall short of those bounds. Ray.

MONSTER. n. f. [monstre, Fr. monstrum, Latin.]

1. Something out of the common order of nature.

It ought to be determined whether monsters be really a distinct species; we find, that some of these monstrous productions have none of those qualities that accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive. Locke.

2. Something horrible for deformity, wickedness, or mischief.

If the live long,
 And, in the end, meet the old course of death,
 Women will all turn monsters. Shakespeare, King Lear.

All human virtue
 Finds envy never conquer'd but by death:
 The great Alcides ev'ry labour past,
 Had fill this monster to subdue at last. Pepe.

TO MONSTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put out of the common order of things. Not in use.

Her offence
 Must be of such unnatural degree
 That monsters it. Shakespeare, King Lear.

I had rather have one scratch my head i' th' sun,
 Than the alarm were struck, than idly sit
 To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

MONSTROSITY. n. f. [from monstrous.] The state of being monstrous; or, out of the common order of the universe. Monstrosity is more analogous.

This is the monstrosity in love, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cressida.

Such a tacit league is against such routs and shoals of people, as have utterly degenerated from nature, as have in their very body and frame of estate a monstrosity. Bacon.

We read of monstrous births, but we often see a greater monstrosity in education: thus, when a father has begot a man, he trains him up into a beast. South's Sermons.

By the same law monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness the case of hermaphrodites. Arbutnot and Pepe.

MONSTROUS. adj. [monstreux, Fr. monstruosus, Latin.]

1. Deviating from the state or order of nature.

Every thing that exists has its particular constitution; and yet some monstrous productions have few of those qualities which accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive their originals. Locke.

2. Strange; wonderful. Generally with some degree of dislike.

Is it not monstrous that this player here
 But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
 Could force his soul so to his conceit,
 That, from her workings, all his visage wan'd. Shakespeare.

O monstrous! but one halfpenny worth of bread to this intolerable deal of lack. Shakespeare.

3. Irregular; enormous.

No monstrous height, or breadth, or length appear,
 The whole at once is bold and regular. Pepe.

4. Shocking; hateful.

This was an invention given out by the Spaniards, to save the monstrous scorn their nation received. Bacon.

MONSTROUS. adv. Exceedingly; very much. A cant term.

Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a dram of each, turn into a mouldy substance, there residing a fair cloud in the bottom, and a monstrous thick oil on the top. Bacon.

She was easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again. L'Estrange.

Add, that the rich have still a gibe in store,
 And will be monstrous witty on the poor. Dryden's Jew.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish monteiro. Bacon.

MONTEITH. n. f. [from the name of the inventor.] A vessel in which glasses are washed.

New things produce new words, and thus Monteb
 Has by one vessel sav'd his name from death. King.

MONTH. n. f. [monat, Saxon.] A space of time either measured by the sun or moon: the lunar month is the time between the change and change, or the time in which the moon comes to the same point: the solar month is the time in which the sun passes through a sign of the zodiac: the calendar months, by which we reckon time, are unequally of thirty or one-and-thirty days, except February, which is of twenty-eight, and in leap year of twenty-nine.

Till the expiration of your month,
 Sojourn with my sister. Shakespeare, King Lear.

From a month old even unto five years old. Lev. xxvii. 6.

Months are not only lunar, and measured by the moon, but also solar, and determined by the motion of the sun, in thirty degrees of the ecliptic. Evans's Vulgar Errors; b. iv.

As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
 So many years is the condemn'd by fate.

To daily death. Dryden's Thea. and Honoria.

MONTH'S MIND. n. f. Longing desire.

MORALIST. n. f. [moraliste, French.] One who teaches the duties of life.

The advice given by a great moralist to his friend was, that he should compose his passions; and let that be the work of reason, which would certainly be the work of time. Addison.

MORALITY. n. f. [moralité, Fr. from moral.] Addison.

1. The doctrine of the duties of life; ethics.

The system of moralité, to be gathered out of the writings of ancient sages, falls very short of that delivered in the gospel. Swift's Miscel.

A necessity of sinning is as impossible in moralité, as any the greatest difficulty can be in nature. Baker on Learning.

2. The form of an action which makes it the subject of reward, or punishment.

The moralité of an action is founded in the freedom of that principle, by virtue of which it is in the agent's power, having all things ready and requisite to the performance of an action, either to perform or not perform it. South's Sermons.

TO MORALIZE. v. a. [moraliser, French.]

1. To apply to moral purposes; to explain in a moral sense.

He 'as left me here behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

High as their trumpets tune his lyre he strung,
And with his prince's arms he moraliz'd his song. Prior.

TO MORALIZE. v. n. To speak or write on moral subjects.

MORALIZER. n. f. [moralizer, French.] He who moralizes.

MORALLY. adv. [moral.]

1. In the ethical sense.

By good, good morally so called, bonum honestum, ought chiefly to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure, the bonum utile or jucundum, hardly come into any account here. South's Sermons.

Because this, of the two brothers killing each other, is an action morally unnatural; therefore, by way of preparation, the tragedy would have begun with heaven and earth in disorder, something physically unnatural. Rymer.

2. According to the rules of virtue.

To take away rewards and punishments, is only pleasing to a man who resolves not to live morally. Dryden.

3. Popularly; according to the common occurrences of life; according to the common judgment made of things.

It is morally impossible for an hypocrite to keep himself long upon his guard. L'Estrange.

The concurring accounts of many such witnesses render it morally, or, as we might speak, absolutely impossible that these things should be false. Atterbury's Sermons.

MORALS. n. f. [moralis, Latin.] The practice of the duties of life; behaviour with respect to others.

Some, as corrupt in their moralis as vice could make them, have yet been solicitous to have their children soberly, virtuously, and piously brought up. South's Sermons.

Learn then what moralis critics ought to show:

'Tis not enough wit, arts, and learning join;

In all you speak, let truth and candor shine. Pope.

MORALS. n. f. [moralis, French.] Fen; bog; moor.

Landchapes point out the fairest and most fruitful spots, as well as the rocks, and wildernesses, and moralis of the country. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

MOROSITY. n. f. [morosity, Lat.] Diseased state. A word not in use.

The inference is fair, from the organ to the action, that they have eyes, therefore some sight was designed, if we except the casual impediments or morbifities in individuals. Brown.

MON

MORDACIOUS. adj. mordax, Latin.] Biting; apt to bite.

MORDACITY. n. f. [mordacitas, mordacit, Fr. from mordax, Latin.] Biting quality.

It is to be inquired, whether there be any menstruum to dissolve any metal that is not fretting or corroding, and openeth the body by sympathy, and not by mordacity, or violent penetration. Bacon's Physical Remains.

MORDICANT. n. f. [mordens, Lat. mordicans, Fr.] Biting; acrid.

He presumes, that the mordicant quality of bodies must proceed from a fiery ingredient; whereas the light and inflammable parts must be driven away by that time the fire has reduced the body to ashes. Boyle.

MORDICATION. n. f. [mordicant.] The act of corroding or biting.

Another cause is mordication of the orifices, especially of the mesenteric veins; as any thing that is sharp and biting doth provoke the part to expel, and mustard provoketh freezing. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 37.

MORE. adj. [mape, Saxon, the comparative of some or great.]

1. In greater number; in greater quantity; in greater degree.

The mort o' the deer; oh that is entertainment
My bosom likes not. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

2. [Mort, Hollandic.] A great quantity. Not in elegant use.
MO'RTAL. adj. [mortalis, Lat. mortal, Fr.]

1. Subject to death; doomed sometime to die.
Nature does require
Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
I her frail son amongst my brethren mortal Must give my attendance to. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. 1 Cor. xv. 53.
Heav'nly powers, where shall we find such love!
Which of ye will be mortal to redeem
Man's mortal crime; and just, th' unjust to save. Milton.

Know,
The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die;
From that day mortal: and this happy state Shalt lose. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

2. Deadly; destructive; procuring death.
Come all you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me from the crown to the toe, top full Of cruelty. Shakefp. Macbeth.

The life of keeping those accounts first began in the year 1592, being a time of great mortality. Grant.

5. Human nature.
A single vision so transports them, that it makes up the happines of their lives; mortality cannot bear it often. Dryd.
Take these tears, mortality's relief,
And till we share your joys, forgive our grief. Pope.

MO'RTALLY. adv. [from mortal.]

1. Irreversibly; to death.
In the battle of Landen you were not only dangerously, but, in all appearance, mortally wounded. Dryden.

2. Extremely; to extremity.
Adrian mortally envied poets, painters, and artificers, in works wherein he had a vein to excel. Bacon's Essay.
Know all, who would pretend to my good grace,
I mortally dislike a damning face. Granville.

MO'RTALLY. n. f. [mortalium, Lat. mortalium, Fr.]

1. A strong vessel in which materials are broken by being pounded with a pestle.
Except you could bray Christendom in a mortar, and mould
it into a new paste, there is no possibility of an holy war. Bacon's Holy War.

2. The action of the diaphragm and muscles serves for the communion of the meat in the stomach by their constant agitation upwards and downwards, resembling the pounding of materials in a mortar. Roy on Creation.

2. A short wide cannon out of which bombs are thrown.
Those arms which for nine centuries had brav'd
The wrath of time on antique stone engrav'd,
Now torn by mortars stand yet undecad'd. Granville.
On nobler trophies by thy valour rais'd.

MO'RTAR. n. f. [morter, Dutch; mortier, French.] Cement made of lime and sand with water, and used to join stones or bricks.

Mortar, in architecture, is a preparation of lime and sand mixed up with water, serving as a cement, and used by masons and bricklayers in building of walls of stone and brick.
Wolius observes, that the sand should be dry and sharp, so as to prick the hands when rubbed, yet not earthy, so as to foul the water it is washed in: he also finds fault with masons and bricklayers as committing a great error, in letting their lime slacken and cool before they make up their mortar, and also in letting their mortar cool and die before they use it; therefore he advises, that if you expect your work to be well done, and to continue long, to work up the lime quick, and but a little at a time, that the mortar may not lie long before it be used.

I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakefp. King Lear.

They had brick for stone, and slime for mortar. Gen. xi. 3.
Lime hot out of the kiln mixed soft with water, putting sand to it, will make better mortar than other. Mortimer.

MO'RTGAGE. n. f. [mort and gage, French.]

1. A dead pledge; a thing put into the hands of a creditor.
Th' estate runs out, and mortgages are made,
Their fortune ruin'd, and their fame betray'd. Dryden.
The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages. Arbutnot.

The broker,
Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He seeks bye-freets, and faves th' expensive coach. Gay.

2. The state of being pledged.
The land is given in mortgage only, with full intention to be redeemed within one year. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

MO'RTGAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To pledge; to put to pledge; to make over to a creditor as a security.

Let men contrive how they disentangle their mortgaged souls. Dryden.

MOR

MORTGAGE. n. f. [from mortgage.] He that takes or receives a mortgage.

An act may pass for publick registries of land, by which all purchasers or mortgagors may be secured of all monies they lay out. Temple's Miscel.

MORTGAGER. n. f. [from mortgage.] He that gives a mortgage.

MORTIFEROUS. adj. [mortifer, Latin.] Fatal; deadly; destructive.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's im-portunity, till they awake from the lethargick sleep, and arise from so dead, so mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life. Hammond's Fundamentals.

These murmurings, like a mortiferous herb, are poisonous even in their first spring. Government of the Tongue, f. 10.

MORTIFICATION. n. f. [mortification, Fr. from mortif.]

1. The state of corrupting, or losing the vital qualities; gangrene.
It appeareth in the gangrene, or mortification of flesh, either by opiate, or intense colds. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 333.

My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immedicable,
Rankle and fester, and gangrene,
To black mortification. Milton's Agonist. l. 617.

2. Destruction of active qualities.
Inquire what gives impediment to union or restitution, which is called mortification; as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine. Bacon's Physical Remains.

3. The act of subduing the body by hardships and macerations.
A diet of some fish is more rich and alkaline than that of flesh, and therefore very improper for such as practise mortification. Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. Humiliation; subjection of the passions.
The mortification of our lusts has something in it that is troublesome, yet nothing that is unreasonable. Tillotson.

5. Vexation; trouble.
It is one of the most vexatious mortifications of a studious man, to have his thoughts disordered by a tedious visit. L'Estrange.

We had the mortification to lose the sight of Munich, Augsburg, and Ratibon. Addison on Italy.

MO'RTIFY. v. a. [mortifier, French.]

1. To destroy vital qualities.

2. To destroy active powers, or essential qualities.
What gives impediment to union or restitution is called mortification, as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine or spirit. Bacon.

He mortified pearls in vinegar, and drunk them up. Hakew.
Oil of tartar per deliquium has a great faculty to find out and mortify acid spirits. Boyle.

3. To subdue inordinate passions.
The breath no sooner left his father's body,
But that his wildness mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too. Shakefp. Henry V.

Their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm Excite the mortified man. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Suppress thy knowing pride,
Mortify thy learned lust,
Vain are thy thoughts, while thou thyself art dust. Prior.

He modestly conjectures,
His pupil might be tir'd with lectures,
Which help'd to mortify his pride. Swift.

4. To macerate or harass the body to compliance with the mind.
We mortify ourselves with fast, and think we fare coarsely if we abstain from flesh. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Mortify'd he was to that degree,
A poorer than himself he would not see. Dryden.

5. To humble; to depress; to vex.
Let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Shakefp.
He is controuled by a nod, mortified by a frown, and transported by a smile. Addison's Guard. N° 113.

How often is the ambitious man mortified with the very praises he receives, if they do not rise to high as he thinks they ought. Addison's Spect. N° 256.

MO'RTIFY. v. n.

1. To gangrene; to corrupt.
Try it with capon laid abroad, to see whether it will mortify and become tender sooner; or with dead flies with water cast upon them, to see whether it will putrefy. Bacon.

2. To be subdu'd; to die away.
MO'RTISE. n. f. [mortise, Fr.] A hole cut into wood that another piece may be put into it and form a joint.

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
If it hath rustia'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise. Shakefp. Othello.

But with'd to dwell for ever in the grove. Dryden.
The senses represent the earth as immovable; for though it do move in itself, it rests to us who are carried with it. Glan.
This saying, that God is the place of spirits, being literal, makes us conceive that spirits move up and down, and have their distances and intervals in God, as bodies have in space. Locke.
When we are come to the utmost extremity of body, what is there that can put a stop, and satisfy the mind, that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it? Locke.
Any thing that moves round about in a circle in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds,

- MOULD. n. f. [from moelt, Swedish.] 1. A kind of concretion on the top or outside of things kept, motionless and damp; now discovered by microscopes to be perfect plants.
All moulds are inceptions of putrefaction, as the moulds of pies and flesh, which moulds turn into worms. Bacon.
Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees, but may be better fort'd as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.
Another special affinity is between plants and mould, or pu-trefaction; for all putrefaction, if it dissolve not in arefaction, will, in the end, issue into plants. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- The malt made in Summer is apt to contract mould. Hort.
A hermit, who has been shut up in his cell in a college, has contracted a sort of mould and rust upon his soul, and all his air has awkwardness in them. Watts.
2. [Mols, Saxon.] Earth; soil; ground in which any thing grows.
Those moulds that are of a bright chequer or hazely colour are accounted the best; next to that, the dark grey and rustlet moulds are accounted best; the light and dark ash-colour are reckoned the worst, such as are usually found on common or heathy

MOU

- heathy ground: the clear tawny is by no means to be approved, but that of a yellowish colour is reckoned the worst of all; this is commonly found in wild and waste parts of the country, and for the most part produces nothing but gobs, furze, and fern. All good lands after rain, or breaking up by the spade, will emit a good smell; that being always the best that is neither too unctuous or too lean, but such as will easily dissolve; of a just confluence between sand and clay. Miller.
- Though worms devour me, though I turn to mould,
Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold. Sandys's Paraph.
The black earth, every-where obvious on the surface of the ground, we call mould. Woodward.

Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then what might else be wrought Fusile, or grav'n in metal. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
We may hope for new heavens and a new earth, more pure and perfect than the former; as if this was a refiner's fire, to purge out the dross and coarse parts, and then cast the mass again into a new and better mould. Burnet.
Sure our souls were near allied, and thine
Cast in the same poetick mould with mine. Dryden.
Here in fit moulds to Indian nations known,
Are cast the several kinds of precious stone. Blackmore.
4. Cast; form.
No mates for you,
Unless you were of gentler, milder mould. Shakespeare.
William earl of Pembroke was a man of another mould, and making, and of another fame, being the most universally belov'd of any man of that age; and, having a great office in the court, he made the court itself better esteem'd, and more revered in the country. Clarendon.
- Learn
What creatures there inhabit, of what mould,
Or substance, how endu'd, and what their pow'r,
And where their weakness. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.

Ne can the man that moulds in idle cell
Unto her happy mansion attain. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
There be some houses wherein sweet meats will relent, and baked meats will mould, more than in others. Bacon.
- TO MOULD. v. a. To cover with mould; to corrupt by mould.
Very coarse, hoary, moulded bread the soldiers thrust upon their spears, railing against Ferdinand, who made no better provision. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
- TO MOULD. v. a. [from the noun.] I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
Here is the cap your worship did bespeak;
Why this was moulded on a poringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd. Shakespeare.
The king had taken such liking of his person, that he resolved to make him a master-piece, and to mould him plato-nically to his own idea. Watson's Buckingham.
Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay
To mould me man?
He forgoeth and mouldeth metals, and builds houses. Hale.

MOUND. n. f. [mūn'dan, Saxon, to defend.] Any thing raised to fortify or defend: usually a bank of earth and stone. His broad branches laden with rich fee, Did stretch themselves without the utmost bound Of this great garden, compass'd with a mound. Fairy Sq. The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves The mounds into salt tears. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.

God had thrown That mountain as his garden mound, high rais'd. Milton. Such as broke through all mounds of law, such as laughed at the sword of vengeance which divine justice brandish'd in their faces. South's Sermons.

Nor cold shall hinder me with horns and hounds To thrice the thickest, or to leap the mounds. Dryden. The state of Milan is like a vast garden surrounded by a noble mound-work of rocks and mountains. Addison.

TO MOUNT. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify with a mound. MOUNT. n. f. [mūnt, French; mōnt, Latin.]

1. A mountain; a hill. Jacob offered sacrifice upon the mount. Gen. xxxi. 54. Behold yon mountain's hoary height, Made higher with new mounts of snow. Dryden.

2. An artificial hill raised in a garden, or other place. He might see what mounts they had in short time cast, and what a number there was of brave and warlike soldiers. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

3. A public treasure; a bank. Now obsolete. These examples confirmed me in a resolution to spend my time wholly in writing; and to put forth that poor talent God hath given me, not to particular exchanges, but to banks or mounts of perpetuity, which will not break. Bacon.

TO MOUNT. v. n. [mōnter, French.] 1. To rise on high. Doth the eagle mount up at thy command, and make her nest on high? Job iii. 27.

I'll strive, with troubl'd thoughts, to take a nap; Left leaden slumber poize me down to-morrow, When I should mount with wings of victory. Shaksp. A base ignoble mind,

That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shaksp. The fire of trees and houses mounts on high,

And meets half-way new fires that show'r from sky. Cowley. If the liturgy should be offered to them, it would kindle jealousy, and as the first range of that ladder which should serve to mount over all their customs. Clarendon.

Ambitious meteors set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun; not considering, that they have no more time allowed them in their mounting than the single revolution of a day; and that when the light goes from them, they are of necessity to fall. Dryd.

2. To tower; to be built up to great elevation. Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds, yet he shall perish. Jeb xx. 6.

3. To get on horseback. He Like a full acorn'd boar, a churning one, Cry'd, oh! and mounted. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

4. [For amount.] To rise in value. Bring then these blessings to a strict account, Make fair deductions, see to what they mount. Pope.

TO MOUNT. v. a. 1. To raise aloft; to lift on high. The fire that mounts the liquor till 't runs o'er, Seeming to augment, wastes it. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

What power is it which mounts my love so high, That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye? Shaksp. The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by. Ral.

2. To ascend; to climb. Shall we mount again the rural throne, And rule the country kingdoms, once our own? Dryden.

3. To place on horseback. Three hundred horses, in high stables fed, Of these he chose the fairest and the best, To mount the Trojan troop. Dryden's En.

Clear reason, acting in conjunction with a well-disciplined, but strong and vigorous fancy, seldom fail to attain their end: fancy without reason, is like a horse without a rider; and reason without fancy is not well mounted. Grew's Cos. b. ii.

4. To embellish with ornaments. TO MOUNT GUARD. To do duty and watch at any particular post.

5. TO MOUNT A CANNON. To set a piece on its wooden frame for the more easy carriage and management in firing it. MOUNTAIN. n. f. [mōntaignes, French.] A large hill; a vast protuberance of the earth.

I had been drowned; a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man, and what a thing should I have been when I had been swelled? I should have been a mountain of mummy. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe, To make an envious mountain on my back, Where fits deformity to mock my body. Shaksp. As You Like It.

From Acmon's hands a rolling-stone there came, So large, it half deferv'd a mountain's name! Dryden.

MO'UNTAIN. adj. [mōntanus, Latin.] Found on the mountains; pertaining to the mountains; growing on the mountains. Now for our mountain sport, up to yond hill, Your legs are young. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines To wag their high tops, and to make a noise, When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shaksp. MOUNTAINEER. n. f. [from mountain.]

1. An inhabitant of the mountains. A few mountaineers may escape, enough to continue human race; and yet illiterate rufficks, as mountaineers always are. Bentley's Sermons.

Amiteirian troops, of mighty fame, And mountaineers, that from severous came. Dryden's En. 2. A savage; a free booter; a ruffick. Yield, ruffick mountaineer. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

No savage, fierce banditti, or mountaineer, Will dare to foil her virgin purity. Milton. MO'UNTAINET. n. f. [from mountain.] A hillock; a small mount. Elegant, but not in use. Her breasts sweetly rose up like two fair mountaints in the pleasant vale of Tempe. Sidney.

MO'UNTAINOUS. adj. [from mountain.] 1. Hilly; full of mountains. The ascent of the land from the sea to the foot of the mountains, and the height of the mountains from the bottom to the top, are to be computed, when you measure the height of a mountain, or of a mountainous land, in respect of the sea. Baker's Theory of the Earth.

2. Large as mountains; huge; bulky. What custom wills in all things, should we do't, Mountainous error would be too highly heap For truth to o'erpeer. Shaksp. As You Like It.

On earth, in air, amidst the seas and skies, Mountainous heaps of wonders rise; Whole tow'ring strength will ne'er submit To reason's batteries, or the mines of wit. Prior.

3. Inhabiting mountains. In destructions by deluge and earthquake, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant and mountainous people, that can give no account of the time past. Bacon's Essays. MO'UNTAINOUSNESS. n. f. [from mountainous.] State of being full of mountains. Armenia is so called from the mountainousness of it. Beverland on Learning.

MO'UNTAIN-PARSLEY. n. f. [oreoselinum, Lat.] A plant. The mountain-parsley hath a rose-shaped umbellated flower, consisting of several leaves, placed in a circular order, resting on the empalement, which afterwards becomes a fruit composed of two seeds, which are oval, plain, large, streaked and bordered, and sometimes cast off their cover; the leaves are like parsley. Miller.

MO'UNTAIN-ROSE. n. f. [chamærhododendron, Lat.] A plant. The mountain-rose hath a tubulous flower, consisting of one leaf, shaped somewhat like a funnel; from whose cup arises the pointal, fixed like a nail in the hinder part of the flower, which afterwards becomes an oblong fruit, divided into five cells, in which are contained many very small seeds. Miller. MO'UNTANT. adj. [mōntans, Lat.] Rising on high. Hold up, you flutes, Your aprons mountant; you're not oathable, Although, I know, you'll swear. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.

MO'UNTEBANK. n. f. [montare in banco, Italian.] 1. A doctor that mounts a bench in the market, and boasts his infallible remedies and cures. I bought an unction of a mountebank So mortal, that but dip a knife in it, Where it draws blood, no cataplasm so rare, Can save the thing from death. Shaksp. Hamlet.

She, like a mountebank, did wound And stab herself with doubts profound, Only to shew with how small pain The forces of faith are cur'd again. Hudibras, p. i.

But Æschylus, says Horace in some page, Was the first mountebank that trod the stage, It looks to like a mountebank to boast of infallible cures. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

2. Any boastful and false pretender. As nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye, Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks, And many such like libertines of sin. Shaksp. As You Like It.

There are mountebanks, and matherers in state. L'Estrange. Nothing so impossible in nature but mountebanks will undertake. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

TO MOUNTBANK. v. a. [from the noun.] To cheat by false boasts or pretences. I'll mountebank their loves, Shaksp. As You Like It.

Cog their hearts from them. Shaksp. As You Like It. MO'UNTANCE. n. f. Amount of a thing. Mo'unter.

MOU

MO'UNTER. n. f. [from mount.] One that mounts. Though they to the earth were thrown, Yet quickly they regain'd their own, Such nimbleness was never shown; They were two gallant mounters. Drayton's Nymphid.

Few bankers will to heav'n be mounters. Swift. MO'UNTY. n. f. [mōntie, French.] The rise of a hawk. The sport which Bafilus would shew to Zemane, was the mounty at a heron, which getting up on his wagging wings with pain, as though the air next to the earth were not fit to fly through, now diminished the fight of himself. Sidney.

TO MOURN. v. n. [mūrnan, Saxon.] 1. To grieve; to be sorrowful. Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep. Gen. xxi. 31.

I mourn in my complaint. Psal. lvi. 2. This day is holy; mourn not, nor weep. Neh. viii. 9. The people shall mourn over it. Hef. x. 5. My vineyard being desolate, mourneth unto me. Jer. xii. 11.

 MU'GIENT. adj. [mugient, Latin.] Bellowing.
 That a bittren maketh that mugient noise or bumping, by putting its bill into a reed, or by putting the same in water or mud, and after a while retaining the air, but suddenly excluding it again, is not easily made out. Brown.
 MU'GWORT. n. f. [mugwort, Saxon; artemisia, Lat.]
 The flowers and fruit of the mugwort are very like those of the wormwood, but grow erect upon the branches: the flowers are of a purplish colour, and the leaves terminate in sharp points cut into many segments; they are of a dark green on the upper side, and hoary on the under side. Miller.
 Some of the most common simples with us in England are comfrey, bugle, Paul's-betony, and mugwort. Wifman.
 MUL'ATTO. n. f. [Spanish; mulat, French, from mulus, Lat.] One begot between a white and a black, as a mule between different species of animals.
 MU'LBERRY. n. f. [morberrus, Saxon; morus, Lat.]
 The mulberry tree hath large, rough, roundish leaves; the male flowers, or katkins, which have a calyx consisting of four leaves, are sometimes produced upon separate trees, at other times at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree: the fruit is composed of several protuberances, to each of which adhere four small leaves; the seeds are roundish, growing singly in each protuberance; it is planted for the delicacy of the fruit. The white mulberry is commonly cultivated for its leaves to feed silkworms, in France and Italy, though the Persians always make use of the common black mulberry for that purpose. Miller.
 Morton, archbishop of Canterbury, was content to use mor upon a tun; and sometimes a mulberry tree, called morus in Latin, out of a tun. Camden's Remains.

MUL

 The ripest mulberry,
 That will not hold the handling. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 A body black, round, with small grain like tubercles on the surface; not very unlike a mulberry. Woodward's Fossils.
 MULCT. n. f. [mulctus, Latin.] A fine; a penalty: used commonly of pecuniary penalty.
 Because this is a great part, and Eusebius hath yet said nothing, we will, by way of mulct or pain, lay it upon him. Bacon's holy War.
 Look humble upward, see his will disclose
 The forfeit first, and then the fine impose;
 A mulct thy poverty could never pay,
 Had not eternal wisdom found the way. Dryden.
 To MULCT. v. a. [mulctus, Lat. mulctus, Fr.] To punish with fine or forfeiture.
 Marriage without consent of parents they do not make void, but they mulct it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents inheritance. Bacon's New Atlantis.
 MULE. n. f. [mule, mulet, Fr. mula, Latin.] An animal generated between a he ass and a mare, or sometimes between a horse and a she ass.
 You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
 Which, like your asses, and your dogs, and mules,
 You use in abject and in slavish part. Shaksp. As You Like It.
 Five hundred asses yearly took the horse,
 Producing mules of greater speed and force. Sandy.
 Those effluvia in the male seed have the greatest stroke in generation, as is demonstrable in a mule, which doth more resemble the parent, that is, the ass, than the female. Ray.
 Twelve young mules, a strong laborious race. Pope.
 MULETEER. n. f. [muletier, Fr. mulis, Lat.] Mule-driver; horse-boy.
 Base muleteers,
 Like peasant foot-boys, do they keep the walls,
 And dare not take up arms like gentlemen. Shaksp. As You Like It.
 Your ships are not well mann'd,
 Your mariners are muleteers, reapers. Shaksp. As You Like It.

MUMMY. n. f. [mumie, Fr. mumia, Lat. derived by Salmaſius from amum, by Danbar from the Arabic.]

1. A dead body preſerved by the Egyptian art of embalming.

We have two different ſubſtances preſerved for medicinal uſe under the name of mummy: one is the dried fleſh of human bodies embalmed with myrrh and ſpice; the other is the liquor running from ſuch mummies when newly prepared, or when affected by great heat, or by damps: this is ſometimes of a liquid, ſometimes of a ſolid form, as it is preſerved in vials well ſtopped, or ſuffered to dry and harden in the air: the firſt kind is brought to us in large pieces, of a lax and friable texture, light and pungy, of a blackiſh brown colour, and often black and clammy on the ſurface; it is of a ſtrong but not agreeable ſmell: the ſecond fort, in its liquid ſtate, is a thick, opake, and viſcous fluid, of a blackiſh ſtate it is a dry, ſolid ſubſtance, of a fine ſhining black colour and cloſe texture, eaſily broken, and of a good ſmell: this fort is extremely dear, and the firſt fort ſo cheap, that as all kinds of mummy are brought from Egypt we are not to imagine it to be the ancient Egyptian mummy. What our druggiſts are ſupplied with is the fleſh of executed criminals, or of any other bodies the Jews can get, who fill them with the common bitumen ſo plentiful in that part of the world, and adding aloes, and ſome other cheap ingredients, ſend them to be baked in an oven till the juices are exhale'd, and the embalming matter has penetrated ſo thoroughly that the fleſh will keep. Mummy has been eſteem'd reſolvent and baſſamick; and beſides it, the ſkull, and even the moſt growing on the ſkulls of human ſkeletons, have been celebrated for antiepileptick virtues; the fat alſo of the human body has been recommended in rheumatifms, and every other part or humour have been in repute for the cure of ſome diſeaſe: at preſent we are wiſe enough to know, that the virtues aſcribed to the parts of the human body are all either imaginary, or ſuch as may be found in other animal ſubſtances: the mummy and the ſkull alone of all theſe horrid medicines retain their places in the ſhops. Hill's Mat. Med.

The ſilk

Was dy'd in mummy, which the ſkilful

Bailey.
MUSEUM. n. f. [μυσέον.] A repository of learned curiosities.
MUSHROOM. n. f. [musheron, French.]
 1. Mushrooms are by curious naturalists esteemed perfect plants, though their flowers and seeds have not as yet been discovered:
 the true champion or mushroom appears at first of a roundish form like a button, the upper part of which, as also the stalk, is very white, but being opened, the under part is of a livid flesh colour, but the fleshy part, when broken, is very white; when they are suffered to remain undisturbed, they will grow to a large size, and explicate themselves almost to a flatness, and the red part underneath will change to a dark colour:
 in order to cultivate them, open the ground about the roots of the mushrooms, where you will find the earth very often full of small white knobs, which are the off-sets or young mushrooms, these should be carefully gathered, preserving them in lumps with the earth about them, and planted in hot beds. Miller.
 2. An upstart; a wretch risen from the dunghill; a director of a company.
 Mushrooms come up in a night, and yet they are unfown;
 and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms.
Bacon's Natural History.
 Tully, the humble mushroom scarcely known,
 The lowly native of a country town.
Dryden.
MUSHROOMSTONE. n. f. [mushroom and stone.] A kind of Fifteen mushroomstones of the same shape.

Woodward.
MUSICK. n. f. [μουσική; musique, Fr.]
 1. The science of harmonical sounds.
 The man that hath no musick in himself,
 Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
 Is fit for treasons, Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
 Now look into the musick-master's gains,
 Where noble youth at vast expense is taught,
 But eloquence not val'd at a groat. Dryden's Juvenal.
 2. Instrumental or vocal harmony.
 When she speaks,
 Sweet words, like dropping honey, she did shed;
 And twist the pearls and rubies softly brake
 A silver sound, that heavenly musick seem'd to make. F. Qu.
 Such musick
 Before was never made,
 But when of old the sons of morning sung.
 By musick minds an equal temper know,
 Nor swell too high, nor sink too low;
 Warriors the fires with animated sounds,
 Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds.
Pope.
 We have dancing-masters and musick-masters. Arb. and Pope.
MUSICAL. adj. [musical, Fr. from musick.]
 1. Harmonious; melodious; sweet sounding.
 The merry birds
 Chanted above their cheerful harmony,
 And made amongst themselves a sweet comfort,
 That quicken'd the dull spirit with musical comfort. F. Qu.
 Sweet bird that humm'st the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholly;
 Three chearless off the wood among,
 I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton.
 Neither is it enough to give his author's sense, in poetical expressions and in musical numbers. Dryden.
 2. Belonging to musick.
 Several musical instruments are to be seen in the hands of Apollo's muses, which might give great light to the dispute between the ancient and modern music. Addison.
MUSICALLY. adv. [from musical.] Harmoniously; with sweet sound.
 Valentine, musically coy, Shun'd Phædra's arms. Addison.
MUSICALNESS. n. f. [from musical.] Harmony.
MUSICIAN. n. f. [musicus, Lat. musicien, Fr.] One skilled in harmony; one who performs upon instruments of music.
 Though the musicians that shall play to you,
 Had in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
 Yet trait they shall be here. Shakefp. Henry IV.
 The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
 When every goose is cackling, would be thought
 No better a musician than the wren. Shakefp.
 A painter may make a better face than ever was; but he must do it by a kind of felicity, as a musician that maketh an excellent air in music, and not by rule. Bacon's Essays.

MUSK. n. f. [muschio, Italian; musse, Fr.]
Musk is a dry, light and friable substance of a dark blackish colour, with some tinge of a purplish or blood colour in it, feeling somewhat smooth or unctuous: its smell is highly perfumed, and too strong to be agreeable in any large quantity:
 its taste is bitterish: it is brought from the East Indies, mostly from the kingdom of Bantam, some from Tonquin and Cochin China: the animal which produces it is of a very singular kind, not agreeing with any established genus: it is of the size of a common goat but taller; its head resembles that of the greyhound, and its ears stand erect like those of the rabbit: its tail is also erect and short, its legs moderately long, and its hoofs deeply cloven: its hair is a dusky brown, variegated with a faint cast of red and white, every hair being partycoloured: the bag which contains the musk, is three inches long and two wide, and situated in the lower part of the creature's belly; it consists of a thin membrane covered thinly with hair, resembling a small purse, and when genuine, the scent is so strong as to offend the head greatly: toward the orifice of the bag there are several glands, which serve for the secretion of this precious perfume, for the sake of which the Indians kill the animal. Hill.
 Some putrefactions and excrements yield excellent odours;
 as civet and musk. Bacon's Natural History.
MUSK. n. f. [musca, Lat.] Grape hyacinth or grape flower.
Musk hath a bulbous shoot; the leaves are long and narrow; the flower is hermaphroditical, consisting of one leaf, and shaped like a pitcher, and cut at the top into six segments, which are reflexed; the ovary becomes a triangular fruit, divided into three cells, which are full of round seeds. Miller.
MUSKAPPLE. n. f. A kind of apple. Ans.
MUSKCAT. n. f. [mysk and cat.] The animal from which musk is got.

MUSTARD. n. f. [mustard, Welsh; mustard, Fr.] A plant.
 The flower consists of four leaves, which are placed in form of a cross, out of whose flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a fruit or pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides, and are filled with roundish seeds: these pods generally end in a fungous horn, containing the like seeds. To these marks must be added, an acrid burning taste, peculiar to mustard. Miller.
 The pancakes were naught, and the mustard was good. Shak.

 Let not, like Nævius, every error pass;
 The musty wine, foul cloth, or greasy glass. Pope.
 4. Dull; heavy; wanting activity; wanting practice in the occurrences of life.
 Xantippe, being married to a bookish man who has no knowledge of the world, is forced to take his affairs into her own hands, and to spirit him up now and then, that he may not grow musty and unfit for conversation. Addison.
MUTABILITY. n. f. [mutabilitas, Fr. mutabilis, Latin.]
 1. Changeableness; not continuance in the same state.
 The mutability of that end, for which they are made,
 maketh them also changeable. Hooker.
 My fancy was the air, most free,
 And full of mutability,
 Big with chimeras. Suckling.
 Plato confesses that the heavens and the frame of the world are corporeal, and therefore subject to mutability. Stillingfleet.
 2. Inconstancy; change of mind.
 Ambitions, covetings, change of prides, disdain,
 Nice longings, flanders, mutability. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
MUTABLE. adj. [mutabilis, Latin.]
 1. Subject to change; alterable.
 Of things of the most accidental and mutable nature, accidental in their production, and mutable in their continuance, yet God's previdence is as certain in him as the memory is of can be in us. South's Sermons.
 2. Inconstant; unfettered.
 For the mutable rank-scented many,
 Let them regard me, as I do not flatter. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

MUT

I saw thee mutable
Of fancy, fear'd lest one day thou would'st leave me. Milt.
MUTABLENESS. n. f. [from mutable.] Changeableness; uncertainty; instability.
MUTATION. n. f. [mutatio, French; mutatio, Lat.] Change; alteration.

His honour
Was nothing but mutation, ay, and that
From one bad thing to worse. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
The vicissitude or mutation in the superior globe are no fit matter for this present argument. Bacon's Essays.
To make plants grow out of the sun or open air is a great mutation in nature, and may induce a change in the seed. Bacon.

MUTE. adj. [mutus, French; mutus, Latin.]
1. Silent; not vocal; not having the use of voice.
Why did he reason in my soul implant,
And speech, th' effect of reason? To the mute
My speech is lost; my reason to the brute. Dryden.

Mute solemn sorrow, free from female noise,
Such as the majesty of grief destroys. Dryden.
2. Having nothing to say.
Say she be mute, and will not speak a word,
Then I'll commend her volubility. Shakespeare.

All fat mute,
Pondering the danger with deep thoughts. Milton.
All the heav'nly choir stood mute,
And silence was heav'n. Milt. Paradise Lost, l. iii.

The whole perplex'd ignoble crowd,
Mute to my questions, in my praises loud,
Echo'd the word. Prior.

MUTE. n. f.
1. One that has no power of speech.
Either our history shall with full-mouth
Speak freely of our acts; or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth. Shakef.

Your mute I'll be;
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see. Shakef.
He that never hears a word spoken, no wonder if he remain speechless; as one mute do, who from an infant should be bred up amongst mute, and have no teaching. Holder.

Let the figures, to which art cannot give a voice, imitate the muties in their actions. Dryden's Discourse.
2. A letter which without a vowel can make no found.
Grammarians note the easy pronunciation of a mute before a liquid, which doth not therefore necessarily make the preceding vowel long. Holder's Elements of Speech.

To MUTE. v. n. [mutir, French.] To dung as birds.
Mine eyes being open, the sparrows mutied warm dung into mine eyes. Tob. ii. 10.

I could not fright the crows,
Or the least bird from muting on my head. Ben. Johnson.
The bird not able to digest the fruit, from her inconverted muting ariseth this plant. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

MUTELY. adv. [from mute.] Silently; not vocally.
Driving dumb silence from the portal door,
Where he had mutely sat two hours before. Milton:

To-MUTILATE. v. a. [mutile, Fr. mutile, Latin.] To deprive of some essential part.
Such fearing to concede a monstrosity, or mutilate the integrity of Adam, preventively conceive the creation of thirteen ribs. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Sylburgius justly complains that the place is mutilated. Still,
Among the mutilated poets of antiquity there is none whose fragments are so beautiful as those of Sappho. Addison.

Aristotle's works were corrupted, from Strabo's account of their having been mutilated and consumed with moisture. Baker.
Deprivation of a limb, or any essential part.

The subject had been oppressed by fines, imprisonments, mutilations, pillories, and banishments. Clarendon.
Mutilations are not transmitted from father to son, the blind begetting such as can see: cripples, mutilate in their own persons, do come out perfect in their generations. Brown.

MUTINE. n. f. [mutin, French.] A mutineer; a mover of insurrection. Not in use.
In my heart there was a kind of fighting,
That would not let me sleep; methought I lay Worse than the mutines in the bilboes. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Like the mutines of Jerusalem,
Be friends a while. Shakespeare's King John.
MUTINEER. n. f. [from mutin, French.] A mover of insurrection; an opposer of lawful authority.

The war of the duke of Urbino, head of the Spanish mutineers, was unjust. Bacon's War with Spain.
Set wide the muti's garden-gate;
For there our mutineers appoint to meet. Dryden.

They have cashiered several of their followers as mutineers, who have contradicted them in political conversations. Addison.

MUTINOUS. adj. [mutin, French.] Seditious; busy in insurrection; turbulent.

MUT

It tauntingly replied
To th' discontented members, th' mutinous parts,
That envied his receipt. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The laws of England should be administered, and the mutinous severely suppressed. Hayward.

Lend me your guards, that if persuasion fail,
Force may against the mutinous prevail. Waller.
My ears are deaf with this impatient crowd;
Their wants are now grown mutinous and loud. Dryden.

MUTINOUSLY. adv. [from mutinous.] Seditiously; tur-bulently.
A woman, a young woman, a fair woman, was to govern a people in nature mutinously proud, and always before used to hard governors. Sidney.

Men imprudently often, seditiously and mutinously sometimes, employ their zeal for persons. Spratt's Sermon.
MUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from mutinous.] Seditiousness; turbulence.

To MUTINY. v. n. [mutiner, French.] To rise against authority; to make insurrection; to move in sedition.
The spirit of my father begins to mutiny against this servitude. Shakespeare's As you like it.

The people mutiny, the fort is mine,
And all the soldiers to my will incline. Waller.
When Cæsar's army mutined, and grew troublesome, no argument could appease them. Soult's Sermon.

MUTINY. n. f. [from the verb.] Insurrection; sedition.
The king fled to a strong castle, where he was gathering forces to suppress this mutiny. Sidney.

I th' war,
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they shew'd
Most valour, spoke not for them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

In most strange postures We've seen him set himself.
—There is a mutiny in's mind. Shakef. Henry VIII.

Let's then if this frame
Of heav'n were falling, and these elements
In mutiny had from her axle torn
The steadfast earth. Milton's Parad. Lost, l. ii.

Soldiers grow pernicious to their master who becomes their servant, and is in danger of their mutinies, as much as any government of seditions. Temple.

To MUTTER. v. n. [mutire, mutare, Latin.] To grumble;
to murmur.
What would you ask me, that I would deny,
Or stand to mutt'ring on? Shakespeare's Othello.

How! what does his cashier'd worship mutt'ring? Shakef.
Sky low'd, and mutt'ring thunder some sad drops
Wept, at completing of the mortal sin Original! Milton's Par. Lost, l. ix.

They may freely trespass, and do as they please; no man dare accuse them, no, not so much as mutt'ring against them.
Barton on Melancholy.

Bold Britons, at a brave bear-garden fray,
Are rous'd; and clat'ring sticks cry, play, play;
Mean time your filthy foreigner will stare,
And mutt'ring to himself, ha, gen' barbari!

And it is well he mutt'ers, well for him;
Our butchers else would tear him limb from limb. Dryden.
When the tongue of a beautiful female was cut out, it could not forbear mutt'ring. Addison's Spectator.

To MUTTER. v. a. To utter with imperfect articulation; to grumble forth.
Amongst the soldiers this is mutt'ered,
That here you maintain several factions. Shakef. Hen. VI.

A kind of men, so loose of soul,
That in their sleep will mutt'ring their affairs. Shakef. Othello.
Your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath mutt'ered per-

A hateful prattling tongue,
That blows up jealousies, and heightens fears,
By mutt'ring poisonous whispers in mens ears. Crotch.

MUTTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Murmur; obscure utterance.
Without his rod revers'd,
And backward mutters of dissembling power,
We cannot free the lady. Milton.

MUTTERER. n. f. [from mutt'ring.] Grumbler; murmurer.
MUTTERINGLY. adv. [from mutt'ring.] With a low voice;
without distinct articulation.

MUTTON. n. f. [muton, French.]
1. The flesh of sheep dressed for food.
The fat of roasted mutton or beef, falling on the birds, will baste them. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

2. A sheep: now only in ludicrous language.
Here's too small a pasture for such store of mutton. Shak.
The flesh of muttons is better tasted where the sheep feed upon wild thyme and wholesome herbs. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Within a few days were brought out of the country two thousand muttons. Hayward's Edw. VI.

MUTTONFIST. n. f. [muton and fist.] A hand large and red.
Will he who saw the soldiers muttonfist,
And saw the maul'd appear within the list
To witness truth. Dryden's Juvenal, sat. 16.

MUTUAL. adj. [mutuel, French; mutuus, Lat.] Reciprocal; each acting in return or correspondence to the other.
Note a wild and wanton herd,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud,
If they perchance but hear a trumpet found,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
By the sweet power of music. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

What should most excite a mutual flame,
Your rural cares and pleasures are the same. Pope.
MUTUALLY. adv. [from mutual.] Reciprocally; in return.
He never bore
Like labour with the rest; where th' other instruments
Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,
And mutually participate. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
Who mutually hath answer'd my affection. Shakespeare.
The tongue and pen mutually assist one another, writing
what we speak, and speaking what we write. Holder.

Pellucid substances act upon the rays of light at a distance, in refracting, reflecting and inflecting them, and the rays mutually agitate the parts of those substances at a distance for heating them. Newton's Opticks.

They mutually teach, and are taught, that lesson of vain confidence and security. Atterbury's Sermons.
May I the sacred pleasures know
Of friendship amity, nor ever want
A friend with whom I mutually may share Gladness and anguish. Philips.

MUTUALITY. n. f. [from mutual.] Reciprocation.
Villanous thoughts, Rodrigo! when these mutualities so marshall the way, hard at hand comes the incorporate conclusion. Shakespeare's Othello.

MUTZLE. n. f. [mutzle, French.]
1. The mouth of any thing; the mouth of a man in contempt.
But ever anon turning her mutzle toward me, she threw such a prospect upon me, as might well have given a surfeit to any weak lover's stomach. Sidney, l. ii.

Huygens has proved, that a bullet continuing in the velocity with which it leaves the mutzle of the cannon, would require twenty-five years to pass from us to the sun. Cheyne.
If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with the tongs; if the tongs be not at hand, use the mutzle of the bellows. Swift's Rules to Servants.

2. A fastening for the mouth, which hinders to bite.
The fifth Harry from curbed licence plucks
The mutzle of refrains; and the wild dog Shall flesh his tooth on ev'ry innocent. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair;
With golden mutzles all their mouths were bound. Dryden.
To MUTZLE. v. n. To bring the mouth near;
The bear mutzles, and smells to him, puts his nose to his mouth and to his ears, and at last leaves him. L'Estrange.

To MUTZLE. v. a.
1. To bind the mouth.
This butcher's cur is venom mouth'd, and I Have not the pow'r to mutzle him; therefore best Not wake him in his lumber. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

My dagger mutzled,
Left it should bite its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous. Shak. Winter's Tale.
The bear, the boar, and every savage name,
Wild in effect, though in appearance tame,
Lay waste thy woods, destroy thy blissful bow'r,
And mutzled though they seem, the mutzles devour. Dryden.

Through the town with slow and solemn air,
Led by the nostril, walks the mutzled bear. Gay's Post.
2. To fondle with the mouth close. A low word.
The nurse was then mutzling and coaxing of the child.
My pronoun possessive. [See MINE.] Belonging to me. My is used before a substantive, and mine anciently and properly before a vowel. My is now commonly used indifferently before both. My is used when the substantive follows, and mine when it goes before: as, this is my book; this book is mine.
Her feet she in my neck doth place.

MYOLOGY. n. f. Shortness of sight.

MYRIAD. n. f. [myriades.]
1. The number of ten thousand.
2. Proverbially any great number.

Assemble thou,
Of all those myriads, which we lead, the chief. Milton.
Are there legions of devils who are continually designing and working our ruin? there are also myriads of good angels who are more cheerful and officious to do us good. Tillotson.

Safe fits the goddess in her dark retreat;
Around her, myriads of ideas wait,
And endless shapes. Prior.

MYRMIDON. n. f. [myrmidon.] Any rude ruffian; so named from the soldiers of Achilles.
The mass of the people will not endure to be governed by Clodius and Curio, at the head of their myrmidons, though these be ever so numerous, and composed of their own representatives. Swift.

MYROBALAN. n. f. [myrobalanus, Latin.] A fruit.
The myrobalans are a dried fruit, of which we have five kinds: they are fleshy, generally with a stone and kernel;
having the pulpy part more or less of an austere acrid taste:
they are the production of five different trees growing in the East Indies, where they are eaten preferred: they serve also for making and for dressing leather: they have been long in great esteem for their quality of opening the bowels in a gentle manner, and afterwards strengthening them by their astringency; but the present practice rejects them all. Hill.

The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures; for it is sweet, and yet astringent. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 644.
MYROPOLIST. n. f. [myropolis and polis.] One who sells unguents.

MYRRH. n. f. [myrrha, Latin; myrrhe, Fr.] A gum.
Myrrh is a vegetable product of the gum resin kind, sent to us in loose granules from the size of a pepper corn to that of a walnut, of a reddish brown colour, with more or less of an admixture of yellow: its taste is bitter and acrid, with a peculiar aromatic flavour, but very nauseous: its smell is strong, but not disagreeable: it is brought from Ethiopia, but the tree which produces it is wholly unknown. Our myrrh is the very drug known by the ancients under the same name: internally applied it is a powerful resolvent, and externally applied it is discutient and vulnerary. Hill's M. Med.

The myrrh sweet bleeding in the bitter wound. Spenser.
I dropt in a little honey of roses, with a few drops of tincture of myrrh. Wife's Surgery.

MYRRHINE. adj. [myrrhinus, Latin.] Made of the myrrhine stone.
How they quaff in gold,
Crystal and myrrhine cups imbos'd with gems
And studs of pearl. Milton's Par. Reg. b. iv.

- MYSTÉRIOUS. adj. [mysterieux, French, from mystery.]
 1. Inaccessible to the understanding; awfully obscure.
 God at last
 To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd, Though in mysterious terms. Milton's Par. Lost. b. x.
 Then the true Son of knowledge first appear'd,
 And the old dark mysterious clouds were clear'd. Denham.
 2. Artfully perplexed.
 Those princes who were most distinguished for their mysterious skill in government, found, by the event, that they had ill consulted their own quiet, or the happiness of their people. Swift's Thoughts on the State of Affairs.
MYSTÉRIOUSLY. adv. [from mysterious.]
 1. In a manner above understanding.
 2. Obscurely; enigmatically.
 Our duty of preparation contained in this one word, try or examine, being after the manner of mysteries, mysteriously and secretly described, there is reason to believe that there is in it very much duty. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
 Each stair mysteriously was meant. Milton.
MYSTÉRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from mysterious.]
 1. Holy obscurity.
 My purpose is, to gather together into an union all those several portions of truth, and differing apprehensions of mysteriousness. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
 2. Artful difficulty or perplexity.
 To MYSTERIZE. v. a. [from mystery.] To explain as enigmas.
 Mysterizing their enigmas, they make the particular ones of the twelve tribes accommodable unto the twelve signs of the zodiac. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.
MYSTERY. n. f. [μυστήριον; myster, Fr.]
 1. Something above human intelligence; something awfully obscure.
 They can judge as fitly of his worth,
 As I can of those mysteries which heav'n
 Will not have earth to know. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Upon holy days, let the matter of your meditations be according to the mystery of the day; and to your ordinary devotions of every day, add the prayer which is fitted to the mystery. Taylor.
 If God should please to reveal unto us this great mystery of the trinity, or some other mysteries in our holy religion, we should not be able to understand them, unless he would bestow on us some new faculties of the mind. Swift's Sermon.
 2. An enigma; any thing artfully made difficult.
 To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter. Shak. Mer. Wives of Windsor.
 Important truths still let your fables hold,
 And moral mysteries with art unfold. Granville.
 3. A trade; a calling: in this sense it should, according to Warburton, be written mystery, from myster, French, a trade.
 And that which is the noblest mystery,
 Brings to reproach and common infamy. Habberd's Tale.

NAM

The king's army was the last enemy the west had been acquainted with, and had left no good name behind.
Clarendon, b. viii.

Renown; fame; celebrity; eminence; praise; remembrance; memory; distinction; honour.
What men of name resort to him?
Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier;
And Rice ap Thomas with a valiant crew,
And many others of great name and worth.
Visit eminent persons of great name abroad; to tell how the life agreeth with the fame.
Here rest thy bones in rich Hesperia's plains,
Thy name, 'tis all a ghost can have, remains.
A hundred knights
Approv'd in fight, and men of mighty name.
These shall be towns of mighty fame,
Tho' now they lie obscure, and lands without a name.
Bartolus is of great name; whose authority is as much valued amongst the modern lawyers, as Papinian's was among the ancients.
Power delegated; imputed character.
In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we banish him.
Fictitious imputation.
When Ulysses with fallacious arts,
Had forg'd a treason in my patron's name,
My kinsman fell.
Appearance; not reality; assumed character.
I'll to him again, in the name of Brook;
He'll tell me all his purpose.
There is a friend which is only a friend in name.
An opprobrious appellation.
Bids her confess; calls her ten thousand names;
In vain the kneels.
Like the watermen of Thames
I row by, and call them names.
To NAME, v. a. [from the noun.]
To discriminate by a particular appellation.
I mention here a son of the king's whom Florizel
I now name to you; and with speed to pace
To speak of Perdita.
Thou hast had seven husbands, neither wait thou named after any of them.
His name was called Jesus, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived.
To mention by name.
Accustom not thy mouth to swearing: neither use thyself to the naming of the Holy One.
To specify; to nominate.
Did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom my father nam'd? your Edgar.
Bring me him up whom I shall name.
Let any one name that proposition, whose terms or ideas were either of them innate.
To utter; to mention.
Let my name be named on them.
NAMELESS, adj. [from name.]
On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing.
The milky way,
Fram'd of many nameless stars.
Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
And sacred, place by Dryden's awful dust;
Beneath a rude and nameless stone helies,
To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes.
One of which the name is not known or mentioned.
Little credit is due to accusations of this kind, when they come from suspected, that is, from nameless pens.
NAMELY, adv. [from name.] Particularly; specially; to mention by name.
It can be to nature no injury, that of her we say the fame which diligent beholders of her works have observed; namely, that she provideth for all living creatures nourishment which may suffice.
Which of these sorrows is he subject to?
To none of these, except it be the last;
None, sense love that drew him oft from home.
The council making remonstrances unto queen Elizabeth, of the continual conspiracies against her life; and namely, that a man was lately taken, who stood ready in a very dangerous and suspicious manner to do the deed; advised her to go herself abroad weekly attended. But the queen answered, that she had rather be dead, than put in custody.
For the excellency of the soul, namely, its power of divining in dreams; that several such divinations have been made, none can question.

NAP

Solomon's choice does not only instruct us in that point of history, but furnishes out a very fine moral to us; namely, that he who applies his heart to wisdom, does at the same time take the most proper method for gaining long life, riches, and reputation.
NAME, n. f. [name.] One who calls or knows any by name.
NAMEAKE, n. f. One that has the same name with another.
Nor does the dog fish at sea, much more make out the dog of land, than that his cognominal, or nameake in the heavens.
One author is a mole to another: it is impossible for them to discover beauties; they have eyes only for blemishes:
they can indeed see the light, as is said of their nameakes;
but immediately shut their eyes.
NAP, n. f. [nappepan, Saxon, to sleep.]
1. Slumber; a short sleep.
Mopla sat fivallowing of sleep with open mouth making such a noise, as no body could lay the stealing of a nap to her charge.
Let your bounty
Take a nap, and I will awake it anon.
The fun had long since in the lap
Of Thetis, taken out his nap.
So long as I'm at the forge you are still taking your nap.
[Jnoppa, Saxon.] Down; villous substance.
Amongst those leaves the made a butterfly
With excellent device and wondrous flight;
The velvet nap, which on his wings doth lie,
The filken down, with which his back is dight.
Jack Cade the clothier, means to dress the Commonwealth, and set a new nap upon it.
Plants, though they have no prickles, have a kind of downy or velvet rind upon their leaves; which down or nap cometh of a subtil spirit, in a soft or fat substance.
Ah! where must needy poet seek for aid
When dust and rain at once his coat invade;
His only coat! where dust confus'd with rain
Roughens the nap, and leaves a mingled stain.
To NAPP, v. a. [nappepan, Saxon.] To sleep; to be drowsy or secure.
They took him napping in his bed.
A wolf took a dog napping at his master's door.
What is seriously related by Helmont, that soul linen, stopt in a vessel that hath wheat in it, will in twenty-one days time turn the wheat into mice; without conjuring, one may guess to have been the philosophy and information of some housewife, who had not so carefully covered her wheat, but that the mice could come at it, and were there taken napping, just when they had made an end of their good cheer.
NAPTING, n. f. [nap and take.] Surprise; seizure on a sudden; unexpected onset, like that made on men asleep.
Napping, assaults, spoiling, and fringing, have in our fore-father's days, between us and France, been very common.
NAPE, n. f. [Of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it to come from nap, the hair that grows on it; Junius, with his usual Greek sagacity, from νάπη, a bill; perhaps from the same root with knob.] The joint of the neck behind.
Turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves.
Domitian dreamed, the night before he was slain, that a golden head was growing out of the nape of his neck.
NAPERY, n. f. [napery, Italian.] Table-linen.
NA'PHTHA, n. f. [naptha, Lat.] An herb.
Naptha is a very pure, clear, and thin mineral fluid, of a very pale yellow, with a cast of brown in it. It is soft and oily to the touch, of a sharp and unpleasing taste, and of a brisk and penetrating smell; of the bituminous kind. It is extremely ready to take fire, and in places where it is frequent, it exhales a vapour that takes fire at the approach of any flame, and burns to a great distance, sometimes spreading in an instant over half a mile or more of ground, and continuing alight a great while. It is found floating on the waters of f. rings. It is principally used externally in para-lytick cases, and in pains of the limbs. Strabo represents it as a liquid of the top of the water of wells and springs. That found about Babylon is in some springs whitish, tho' it be generally black, and differs little from Petroleum.
NAPPINESS, n. f. [nappy.] The quality of having a nap.
NA'PKIN, n. f. [from nap; which etymology is oddly favoured by Virgil, Tonsillæ ferunt mantilla villis; naparia, Italian.]
1. Cloaths used at table to wipe the hands.
By art were weaved nappins, shirts, and coats, inconsumptible by fire.
The same matter was woven into a napkin at Louvain, which was cleaned by being burnt in the fire.
Napkins, Helioabalus had of cloth of gold, but they were most commonly of linen, or soft wool.

NAR

A handkerchief. Obsolete. This scife is retained in Scot-land.
I am glad I have found this napkin;
This was her first remembrance from the moor.
NAPLESS, adj. [from nap.] Wanting nap; threadbare.
Were he to stand for consul, ne'er would he Appear in th' market place, nor on him put
The napless vesture of humility.
NAPPY, adj. [from nap. Mr. Lye derives it from nappe, Saxon, a cup.] Frothy; spumy; from nap; whence apples and ale are called lamb's wool.
When I my thresher heard,
With nappy beer I to the barn repair'd.
NARCISSUS, n. f. [Latin; narcissus, Fr.] A daffodil.
Nor Narcissus fair
As o'er the fabled mountain hanging still.
NARCISSUS, adj. [narcissus, Fr.] Producing torpor, or stupefaction.
Narcissus includes all that part of the materia medica, which any way produces sleep, whether called by this name, or hypnotics, or opiates.
The ancients esteemed it narcotic or stupefactive, and it is to be found in the list of poisons by Dioscorides.
NARD, n. f. [nardus, Lat. nardus, Gr.]
1. Spikenard; a kind of ointment.
2. An odorous shrub.
Smelt o' the bud o' the briar,
Or the nard in the fire.
He now is come
Into the blissful field, thro' groves of myrrh,
And flowing odours, cania, nard and balm.
NARR, n. f. [narris, Latin.] A nostril not uied, except as in the following passage, in affectation.
There is a Machiavelian plot,
Though every nare of it not.
NARRHALE, n. f. A species of whale.
Those long horns preserved as precious beauties, are but the teeth of narwhals.
NARRABLE, adj. [from narra.] Capable to be told or related.
NARRATE, v. a. [narra, Latin.] To relate; to tell; a word only used in Scotland.
NARRATION, n. f. [narratio, Latin; narration, Fr.] Account; relation; history.
He did doubt of the truth of that narration.
They that desire to look into the narrations of the story, for the variety of the matter we have been careful might have profit.
Homer introduces the best instructions, in the midst of the plainest narrations.
NARRATIVE, adj. [narrativus, Fr. from narra, Lat.]
1. Relating; giving an account.
The words of all judicial acts are written narratively, unless it be in sentences dispositive and enacting; therefore credit ought to be given to these acts, though the words be narrative.
2. Storytelling; apt to relate things past.
Age, as Dacemon says, is always narrative.
The poor, the rich, the valiant and the sage,
And boasting youth, and narrative old age.
NARRATIVE, n. f. A relation; an account; a story.
In the instructions I here give to others, concerning what they should do, take a narrative of what you have done.
Cynibis was much taken with my narrative.
NARRATIVELY, adv. [from narrative.] By way of relation.
The words of all judicial acts are written narratively, unless it be in sentences wherein dispositive and enacting terms are made use of.
NARRATOR, n. f. [narrator, French; from narra, Latin.] A teller; a relater.
Consider whether the narrator be honest and faithful, as well as skillful; whether he hath no peculiar gain or profit by believing or reporting it.
To NARRATE, v. a. [from narra, Latin.] To relate; to give account of; not in use.
I ever narrated my friends,
Of whom he is chief, with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer.
NARROW, adj. [nearu, Saxon, from nyr, near.]
1. Not broad or wide, having but a small distance from side to side.
Edward from Belgia,
Hath pass'd in safety thro' the narrow seas.
The Angel stood in a narrow place, where was no way to turn either to the right hand or to the left.
In a narrow-bottom'd ditch cattle cannot turn themselves.
2. Small; of no great extent.
From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a smallness in the exhalation; but this infereth no infirmity.

NAR

3. Covetous; avaritious.
To narrow breasts he comes all wrapt in gain,
To swelling hearts he shines in honour's fire.
4. Contracted; of confined sentiments; ungenerous.
Nothing more shakes any society than mean divisions between the several orders of its members, and their narrow-hearted repining at each other's gain.
The greatest understanding is narrow. How much of God and nature is there, whereof we never had any idea?
The hopes of receiving good from those whom we gratify, would produce but a very narrow and stinted charity.
A salamander grows familiar with a stranger at first sight, and is not so narrow-spirited as to observe, whether the person she talks to, be in breeches or in petticoats.
It is with narrow-soul'd people as with narrow-neck'd bottles; the less they have in them the more noise they make in pouring it out.
5. Near; within a small distance.
Then Mneftheus to the head his arrow drove,
But made a glancing shot, and mis'd the dove;
Yet mis'd to narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd by the foot the fitting bird.
6. Close; vigilant; attentive.
The orb he roam'd
With narrow search; and with inspection deep Consider'd ev'ry creature, which of all
Most opportune might serve his wiles.
Many malicious spies are searching into the actions of a great man, who is not always the best prepared for so narrow an inspection.
1. To diminish with respect to breadth or wideness.
In the wall he made narrow'd rests, that the beams should not be fastened in the walls of the house.
By reason of the great Continent of Brasilia, the needle deflecteth toward the land twelve degrees; but at the Straits of Magellan, where the land is narrow'd, and the sea on the other side, it varieth about five or six.
A government, which by alienating the affections, losing the opinions, and crossing the interests of the people, leaves out of its compass the greatest part of their consent, may justly be said, in the same degrees it loses ground, to narrow its bottom.
2. To contract; to impair in dignity of extent or influence.
One science is incomparably above all the rest, where it is not by corruption narrow'd into a trade, for mean or ill ends, and secular interests; I mean, theology, which contains the knowledge of God and his creatures.
3. To contract in sentiment or capacity of knowledge.
Desiderate does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things in which we are conversant.
How hard it is to get the mind, narrow'd by a scanty collection of common ideas, to enlarge itself to a more copious stock.
Lo! ev'ry finish'd son returns to thee!
Bounded by nature, narrow'd still by art,
A trifling head, and a contracted heart.
4. To confine; to limit.
By admitting too many things at once into one question, the mind is dazzled and bewildered; whereas by limiting and narrowing the question, you take a fuller survey of the whole.
Our knowledge is much more narrow'd, if we confine ourselves to our own solitary reasonings, without much reading.
5. [In farriery.] A horse is said to narrow, when he does not take ground enough, and does not bear far enough out to the one hand or to the other.
NARROWLY, adv. [from narrow.]
1. With little breadth or wideness; with small distance between the sides.
2. Contractedly; without extent.
The church of England is not so narrowly calculated, that it cannot fall in with any regular species of government.
3. Closely; vigilantly; attentively.
My fellow-schoolmaster
Doth watch Bianca's steps to narrowly.
If it be narrowly considered, this colour will be reprehended or encountered, by imputing to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty.
For a considerable treasure hid in my vineyard, search narrowly when I am gone.
A man's reputation draws eyes upon him that will narrowly inspect every part of him.
4. Nearly; within a little.
Some private vessels took one of the Aquapulca ships, and very narrowly mis'd of the other.
5. Avaritiously; sparingly.

NA'RRON-

NAT

NARROWNESS. n. f. [from narrow.]

1. Want of breadth or wideness.
In our Gothic cathedrals, the narrowness of the arch makes it rise in height, or run out in length. Addison on Italy.
2. Want of extent; want of comprehension.
That prince, who should be so wise and godlike, as by established laws of liberty to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind, against the oppression of power, and narrowness of party, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. Locke's Works.

3. Confined state; contractedness.
The most learned and ingenious society in Europe, confess the narrowness of human attainments. Glanv. Scept.
Cheap vulgar arts, whose narrowness affords
No slight for thoughts, but poorly sticks at words. Denham.
The Latin, a most severe and compendious language, often expresses that in one word, which either the barbarity or the narrowness of modern tongues cannot supply in more. Dryden.

4. Meanness; poverty.
If God will fit thee for this passage, by taking off thy load, and emptying thy bags, and so suit the narrowness of thy fortune to the narrowness of the way thou art to pass, is there any thing but mercy in all this? South's Sermons.
5. Want of capacity.
Another disposition in men, which makes them improper for philosophical contemplations, is not so much from the narrowness of their spirit and understanding, as because they will not take time to extend them. Burn. Theor. of the Earth.

- NAS. From na, na, or has net.
For pity'd is misapp that nas remedy,
But scorn'd been deeds of fond folly. Spenser.

- NA'SAL. adj. [nasus, Latin.] Belonging to the nose.
To pronounce the nasal, and some of the vowels spiritally, the throat is brought to labour, and it makes a guttural pronunciation. Holder's Elements of Speech.
When the discharge lessens, pass a small probe through the nasal duct into the nose every time it is drest, in order to dilate it a little. Sharp's Surgery.

- NA'SICOROUS. adj. [nasus and cornu.] Having the horn on

2. Obscene; lewd.
NA'STILY. adv. [from nasty.]
1. Dirtily; filthily; nauseously.
The most pernicious infection next the plague, is the smell of the jail, when prisoners have been long and close and nastily kept. Bacon's Natural History.

- NA'STINESS. n. f. [from nasty.]
1. Dirt; filth.
This caused the seditious to remain within their station, which by reason of the nastiness of the beastly multitude, might more fitly be termed a kennel than a camp. Hayward.

- NA'STINESS. n. f. [from nasty.]
2. Obsecenity; grossness of ideas.
Their nastiness, their dull obscene talk and ribaldry, cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any who does not baulk his own reason, out of love to their vice. South.
A divine might have employed his pains to better purpose, than in the nastiness of Plautus and Aristophanes. Dry.

- NA'TAL. adj. [natal, Fr. natalis, Latin.] Native; relating to nativity.

NAT

1. Produced or effected by nature.
There is no natural motion of any particular heavy body, which is perpetual, yet it is possible from them to contrive such an artificial revolution as shall constantly be the cause of itself. Wilkins's Dedalus.

2. Illegitimate.
This would turn the vein of that we call natural, to that of legal propagation; which has ever been encouraged as the other has been disfavoured by all institutions. Temple.

3. Bestowed by nature.
If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem that the advantage lies on the side of children born from noble and wealthy parents. Swift.

4. Not forced; not faretched; dictated by nature.
I will now deliver a few of the properest and naturallest considerations that belong to this piece. Watson's Arch.

5. Consonant to natural notions.
Such unnatural connections become, by custom, as natural to the mind as sun and light: fire and warmth go together, and so seem to carry with them as natural an evidence as self-evident truths themselves. Locke.

6. Tender; affectionate by nature.
To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
He wants the natural touch. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

7. Unaffected; according to truth and reality.
What can be more natural than the circumstances in the behaviour of those women who had lost their husbands on this fatal day. Addison.

8. Opposed to violent; as, a natural death.
NATURAL. n. f. [from nature.]
1. An idiot; one whom nature debars from understanding; a fool.
That a monster should be such a natural. Shakespeare.
Take the thoughts of one out of that narrow compass he has been all his life confined to, you will find him no more capable of reasoning than a perfect natural. Locke.

2. Native; original inhabitant.
The inhabitants and natural of the place, should be in a state of freedom. Abbot's Description of the World.
Oppression, in many places, wears the robes of justice, which domineering over the natural may not spare strangers, and strangers will not endure it. Raleigh's Essay.

3. Gift of nature; nature; quality.
The wretcheder are the contenters of all helps; such as presuming on their own natural, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they understand not things. Ben. Johnson.
To consider them in their pure natural, the ear's intellectual faculties were his stronger part, and the duke, his practical.
Watson.

4. NATURALIST. n. f. [from natural.] A student in physics, or natural philosophy.
Admirable artifice! wherewith Galen, tho' a mere naturalist, was so taken, that he could not but adjudge the honour of a hymn to the wife creator. Merr.
It is not credible, that the naturalist could be deceived in his account of a place that lay in the neighbourhood of Rome. Addison on Italy.

5. NATURALIZATION. n. f. [from naturalize.] The act of investing aliens with the privileges of native subjects.
The Spartans were nice in point of naturalization; whereby, while they kept their compals, they stood firm; but when they did spread, they became a windfall. Bacon's Eff.
Encouragement may be given to any merchants that shall come over and turn a certain stock of their own, as naturalization, and freedom from customs the two first years. Temple.
Enemies, by taking advantage of the general naturalization act, invited over foreigners of all religions. Swift.

6. NATURALIZE. v. a. [from natural.]
1. To adopt into a community; to invest with the privileges of native subjects.
The great lords informed the king, that the Irish might not be naturalized without damage to themselves or the crown.
Davies on Ireland.

2. To make natural; to make easy like things natural.
He rises fresh to his hammer and anvil; custom has naturalized his labour to him. South's Sermons.

3. NATURALLY. adv. [from natural.]
1. According to the power or impulses of unassisted nature.
Our sovereign good is desired naturally; God, the author of that natural desire, hath appointed natural means whereby to fulfil it; but man having utterly disabled his nature unto these means, hath had other revealed, and hath received from heaven a law to teach him, how that which is desired naturally, must now supernaturally be attained. Hesker.
If some be not certain in the reports it makes of things to the mind, there can be naturally no such thing as certainty or knowledge. South's Sermons.

2. According to nature; without affectation.
That part
Was aptly fitted, and naturally perform'd. Shakespeare.
This answers fully and naturally to the place of the abyss

3. NATURAL. adj. [naturel, French, from nature.]
1. Pro-

NAV

before the deluge, inclos'd within the vault of the earth.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
The thoughts are to be measured only by their propriety; that is, as they flow more or less naturally from the persons and occasions. Dryden.

Spontaneously.
NATURALNESS. n. f. [from natural.]
1. The state of being given or produced by nature.
The naturalness of a desire, is the cause that the satisfaction of it is pleasure, and pleasure importunes the will; and that which importunes the will, puts a difficulty on the will refusing or forbearing it. South's Sermons.

2. Conformity to truth and reality; not affectation.
He must understand what is contained in the temperament of the eyes, in the naturalness of the eyebrows. Dryden.
Horace speaks of these pertain an ode that may be reckoned among the finest for the naturalness of the thought, and the beauty of the expression. Addison.

NATURE. n. f. [nature, Latin; nature, French.]
1. An imaginary being supposed to preside over the material and animal world.
Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My services are bound. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
When it was said to Anaxagoras, the Athenians have condemned you to die; he said again, and nature them. Bacon.

2. Let the position nature mount, and let
The coachman art be let. Cowley.
Heav'n bestows
At home all riches that wife nature needs. Cowley.
Simple nature to his hope has giv'n,
Beyond the cloud-top hill an humbler heav'n. Pope.

3. The native state or properties of any thing, by which it is discriminated from others.
Between the animal and rational province, some animals have a dark resemblance of the induxes of reason: so between the corporeal and intellectual world, there is man participating much of both natures. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.

4. The constitution of an animated body.
Nature, as it grows again tow'r'd earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy. Shakef.
We're not ourselves,
When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body. Shakespeare's King Lear.

5. Disposition of mind; temper.
Nothing could have subdu'd nature
To such a lowness but his unkind daughters. Shakef.
A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whole nature is so far from doing harms,
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
My practices ride easy. Shakespeare's King Lear.

6. The regular course of things.
My end
Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence. Shakef.
The compals of natural existence.
If their dam may be judge, the young apes are the most beautiful things in nature. Glanv.

7. Natural affection, or reverence; native sensations.
Have we not seen
The murd'ring son ascend his parent's bed,
Thro' violated nature force his way,
And stain the sacred womb where once he lay? Pope.

8. The state or operation of the material world.
He binding nature fast in fate,
Left conscience free and will. Pope.

9. Sort; species.
A dispute of this nature caused mischief in abundance betwixt a king and an archbishop. Dryden.

10. Sentiments or images adapted to nature, or conformable to truth and reality.
Only nature can please those tastes which are unprejudiced and refined. Addison.

11. Physics; the science which teaches the qualities of things.
Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night,
God said, let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

NATURALITY. n. f. [from nature.] The state of being produced by nature. A word not used.
This cannot be allowed, except we impute that unto the first cause which we impose not on the second; or what we deny unto nature we impute unto nativity. Brown's V. Err.

NAV. adj. [naval, Fr. navalis, Latin.]
1. Consisting of ships.
Encamping on the main,
Our naval army had besieged Spain;
They that the whole world's monarchy design'd,
Are to their ports by our bold fleet confin'd.
As our high vessels pass their wat'ry way,
Let all the naval world due homage pay. Prior.

2. Belonging to ships.
Masters of such numbers of strong and valiant men, as well

NAV

well as of all the naval stores that furnish the world. Temple.
NAVE. n. f. [nap; Saxon.]

1. The middle part of the wheel in which the axle moves.
Out, out, thou trumpet fortune! all you gods

In general synod take away her pow'r;
Break all the spokes and felines from her wheel,
And bowl the pound nave down the hill of heav'n,
As low as to the fends. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

In the wheels of waggons the hollows of the nave, by their swift rotations on the ends of the axle-trees, produce a heat sometimes so intense as to set them on fire. Ray.

2. [From navis, nave, old Fr.] The middle part of the church distinct from the aisles or wings.

It comprehends the nave or body of the church, together with the chancel. Ayliffe's Par.

NA'VEL. n. f. [napela, navele, Saxon.]

1. The point in the middle of the belly, by which embryos communicate with the parent.

The use of the navele is to continue the infant unto the mother, and by the vessels thereof to convey its aliments.

As children, while within the womb they live,
Feed by the navele: here they feed not so. Davies.

There is a superintending Providence, that some animals will hunt for the teat before they are quite gotten out of the secundines and parted from the navele string. Derham.

2. The middle; the interior part.

Being press'd to the war,
Even when the navele of the fate was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates. Shakespeare's Cor.

Within the navele of this hideous wood,
Immur'd in cyprus shades, a forcerer dwells. Milton.

NA'VELGALL. n. f.

Navelegall is a bruise on the top of the chine of the back, behind the saddle, right against the navele, occasioned either by the saddle being split behind, or the stuffing being wanting, or by the crupper buckle sitting down in that place, or some hard weight or knobs lying directly behind the saddle.

NA'VELWORT. n. f.

It hath the appearance of housebeck; from which it differs only in having an oblong tubulous flower of one leaf, divided at the top into five parts. This plant is used in medicine, and grows wild upon old walls. Miller.

NA'VEW. n. f. [napus, Lat. navet, naveau, Fr.]

It agrees in most respects with the turnep; but has a less root, and somewhat warmer in taste. The species are three. In the life of Ely the third species, which is wild, is very much cultivated, it being the cole seed from which they draw the oil. Miller.

NAUGHT. adj. [napre, naupre, Saxon; that is, ne aught, not any thing.] Bad; corrupt; worthless.

With them that are able to put a difference between things naught and things indifferent in the church of Rome, we are yet at controversy about the manner of removing that which is naught. Hooker, b. iv.

Thy sister's naught: Oh Regan! she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness like a vulture here. Shakespeare.

NAUGHT. n. f. Nothing. This is commonly, though improperly, written naught. See AUGHT and OUGHT.

Be you contented

To have a son set your decrees at naught,
To pluck down justice from your awful bench. Shakespeare.

NAUGHTILY. adv. [from naughty.] Wickedly; corruptly.

NAUGHTINESS. n. f. [from naughty.] Wickedness; badness.

Slight wickedness or perversity, as of children.

No remembrance of naughtiness delights but mine own;
and methinks the accusing his traps might in some manner excuse my fault, which certainly I loth to do. Sidney, b. ii.

NAUGHTY. adj. [See NAUGHT.]

1. Bad; wicked; corrupt.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father. Sidney, b. ii.

These naughty times

Put bars between the owners and their rights. Shakespeare.

How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Shakespeare.

2. It is now seldom used but in ludicrous censure.

If gentle slumbers on thy temples creep,
But naughty man, thou dost not mean to sleep,
Betake thee to thy bed. Dryden.

NAUTICAL. adj. [nauticularis, Lat. nauticarius, Fr.] In anatomy, the third bone in each foot that lies between the astragalus and ossa cuneiformia. Dill.

NAVIGABLE. adj. [navigable, Fr. navigabilis, Latin.] Capable of being passed by ships or boats.

The first-peopled cities were all founded upon these navigate rivers, or their branches, by which the one might give succour to the other. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Almighty Jove surveys
Earth, air, and shores, and navigable seas. Dryden.

NAU

NAVIGABLENESS. n. f. [from navigable.] Capacity to be passed in vessels.

To NAVIGATE. v. n. [navigo, Lat. navigo, Fr.] To sail;
to pass by water.

The Phoenicians navigated to the extremities of the western ocean. Arbutnot on Canin.

To NAVIGATE. v. a. To pass by ships or boats.

Drusus, the father of the emperor Claudius, was the first who navigated the northern ocean. Arbutnot on Canin.

NAVIGATION. n. f. [navigation, Fr. from navigare.]

1. The art or practice of passing by water.

Our shipping for number, strength, mariners, pilots, and all things that appertain to navigation, is as great as ever.

The loadstone is that great help to navigation.
Rude as their ships, was navigation then,
No useful compass or meridian known;
Coasting, they kept the land within their ken,
And knew no north but when the polestar shone. Dryden.

When Pliny names the Pæni as inventors of navigation, it must be understood of the Phœnicians, from whom the Carthaginians are descended. Arbutnot on Canin.

2. Vessels of navigation.

Tho' you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches, tho' the yclewaved
Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakespeare's Macb.

NAVIGATOR. n. f. [navigateur, Fr. from navigare.] Sailor; seaman; traveller by water.

By the founding of navigators, that sea is not three hundred and sixty foot deep. Brewer.

The rules of navigators must often fail. Brewer's V. Err.

The contrivance may seem difficult, because these submine navigators will want winds, tides, and the sight of the heavens. Wilkin's Man's Man.

This terrestrial globe, which before was only a globe in speculation, has since been surrounded by the boldness of many navigators. Temple.

NAU'LAGE. n. f. [navium, Lat.] The freight of passengers in a ship.

NAU'MACHY. n. f. [naumachia, Fr. naumachia, Latin.] A mock sea fight.

To NAU'SEATE. v. n. [from nausen, Latin.] To grow squeamish; to turn away with disgust.

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and nauseate, and grow tired of a particular subject before you have finished it. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

To NAU'SEATE. v. a.

1. To loath; to reject with disgust.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems arbitrary; for many are cried up in one age, which are decayed and nauseated in another. Brewer's V. Err.

Old age, with silent pace, comes creeping on,
Nauses the praise, which in her youth she won,
And hates the muse by which she was undone. Dryden.

Those heads, as stomachs, are not sure the bell,
Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest. Pope.

2. To strike with disgust.

He let go his hold and turned from her, as if he were nauseated, then gave her a lash with his tail. Swift.

NAU'SEOUS. adj. [from nausea, Latin; nausé, Fr.] Loath-some; disgusting; regarded with abhorrence.

Those trifles wherein children take delight,
Grow nauseous to the young man's appetite.
And from those gaieties our youth requires
To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.

Food of a wholesome juice is pleasant to the taste and agreeable to the stomach, till hunger and thirst be well appeased, and then it begins to be less pleasant, and at last even nauseous and loathsome. Ray.

Old thread-bare phrases will often make you go out of your way to find and apply them, and are nauseous to rational hearers. Swift.

NAU'SEOUSLY. adv. [from nauseous.] Loathsome; disgustfully.

This, though cunningly concealed, as well knowing how nau-seously that drug would go down in a lawful monarchy, which was prescribed for a rebellious commonwealth, yet they at ways kept in reserve. Dryden.

Their father's praise;
So nauseously and so unlike they paint. Garrick's Disp.

NAU'SEOUSNESS. n. f. [from nauseous.] Loathfomeness; quality of raising disgust.

The nauseousness of such company disgusts a reasonable man, when he sees he can hardly approach greatness but as a moated castle; he must first pass through the mud and filth with which it is encompassed. Dryden's Aurengzeib.

NAU'TICAL. adj. [nauticus, Latin.] Pertaining to sailors.

NAU'TICK. adj. [nauticus, Latin.] Pertaining to sailors.

He elegantly threwed by whom he was drawn, which de-painted the nautical compass with autumn, autumn, Can-

NAU'TILUS. n. f. [Latin; nautilis, Fr.] A shell fish furnished with something analogous to oars and a sail. Leach.

NEA

Learn of the little nautilus to sail,
Spread the thin oar and catch the driving gale. Pope.

NA'VEY. n. f. [from navis, Lat.] An assembly of ships, commonly ships of war; a fleet.

On the western coast rideth a puissant navy. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

Levy money, and return the fame to the treasurer of the navy for his majesty's use. Clarendon.

The narrow seas can scarce their navy bear,
Or crowded vessels can their soldiers hold. Dryden.

NAY. adv. [na, Saxon, or ne eye.]

1. No; an adverb of negation.

Disputes in wrangling spend the day,
Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nay. Denham.

2. Not only so but more. A word of amplification.

A good man always profits by his endeavour, yea, when he is absent; nay, when dead, by his example and memory;
to good authors in their style. Bacon's Essays, N. 8.

This is then the ally of Ovid's writings, which is sufficiently recompensed by his other excellencies; nay, this very fault is not without its beauties; for the most severe censor cannot but be pleased. Dryden.

If a son should strike his father, not only the criminal but his whole family would be rooted out, nay, the inhabitants of the place where he lived, would be put to the sword, nay, the place itself would be razed. Addis. Spect. N. 189.

3. Word of refusal.

They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? nay verily; but let them come themselves and fetch us out. Bacon's Essays, N. 37.

The fox made several excuses, but the flock would not be fild nay; so that at last he promised him to come.

He that will not when he may,
When he would he shall have nay. Prov.

NA'YWORD. n. f. [nay and word.]

1. The side of denial; the saying nay.

You would believe my saying,
How'er you lean to th' nayword. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

2. A proverbial reproach; a bye word.

If I do not gull him into a nayword, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

3. A watchword. Not in use.

I have spoke with her; and we have a nayword how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry mum;
she cries budget; and by that we know one another. Shakespeare.

NE. adv. [Saxon.] This particle was formerly of very frequent use, both singly and by contraction in compound words; as, will for ne will or will not; nas for ne nas or has not; nis for ne is or is not. Neither; and not.

His warlike shield all cover'd closely was,
Ne might of mortal eye be ever seen,
Ne made of steel, nor of enduring brass. Fairly Qu.

NEAF. n. f. [neaf, neaf, Saxon; to kindle.] To temper by a gradual and regulated heat.

The workmen let it cool by degrees in such relatings of fire, as they call their neafing heats; lest it should shiver in pieces by a violent succeeding of air in the room of fire.

This did happen for want of the glasses being gradually cooled or neafed. Digby on Bodies.

If you file, engrave, or punch upon your steel, neaf it first, because it will make it softer, and consequently work easier. The common way is to give it a blood-red heat in the fire, then let it cool of itself. Mason's Mech. Exer.

To NEAL. v. n. To be tempered in fire.

Reduction is chiefly effected by fire, wherein if they stand and neal, the imperfect metals vapour away. Bacon.

NEAP. adj. [nepplot, Saxon; nepplot, poor.] Low; decre-scent. Used only of the tide, and therefore sometimes used substantively.

The mother of waters, the great deep, hath lost nothing of her ancient bounds. Her motion of ebbing and flowings of high springs and dead neaps, are as constant as the changes of the moon. Hakewill on Providence.

How doth the sea constantly observe its ebbs and flows, its springs and neap-tides, and still retain its saltness, so convenient for the maintenance of its inhabitants. Ray.

NEAR. prep. [ne; Saxon; naer, Dutch and Scottish.] At no great distance from; close to; nigh.

I have heard thee say,
No grief did ever come so near thy heart,
As when thy lady and thy true love died. Shakespeare.

Thou thought'st it to help me, and such thanks I give,
As one near death to those that with him live. Shakespeare.

With blood the dear alliance shall be bought,
And both the people near destruction brought. Dryden.

The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.

After he has continued his doubling in his thoughts, and enlarged his idea as much as he pleases, he is not one jot nearer the end of such addition than at first setting out. Locke.

2. Advanced towards the end of an enterprise or disquisition.

Unless they add somewhat else to define more certainly what ceremonies shall stand for best, in such sort that all churches in the world shall know them to be the best, and so know them that there may not remain any question about this point; we are not a whit the nearer for that they have hitherto said. Hooker, b. iv. f. 13.

3. Close; not rambling; observant of file or manner of the thing copied.

Hannibal Caro's, in the Italian, is the nearest, the most poetical, and the most sonorous of any translation of the Æneid. Yet though he takes the advantage of blank verse, he commonly allows two lines for one in Virgil, and does not always hit his sense. Dryden.

4. Closely related.

If one shall approach to any that is near of kin to him.

5. Intimate; familiar; admitted to confidence. Lev. xviii. 6.

NECESSARIES. n. f. [from necessary.] Things not only convenient but needful; things not to be left out of daily use.

Quibus dicitur natura negatis.

The supernatural necessaries are, the preventing, assisting, and renewing grace of God, which we suppose God ready to annex to the revelation of his will, in the hearts of all that with obedient humble spirits receive and sincerely embrace it. Hammond's Fundamentals.

The right a son has, to be maintained and provided with the necessaries and conveniences of life, out of his father's stock, gives him a right to succeed to his father's property for his own good. Locke.

NECESSARILY. adv. [from necessary.]

1. Indispensably.

I would know by some special instance, what one article of Christian faith, or what duty required necessarily unto all mens salvation there is, which the very reading of the word of God is not apt to notify. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

2. By inevitable consequence.

They who recall the church unto that which was at the first, must necessarily set bounds and limits unto their speeches.

They subjected God to the fatal chain of causes, whereas they should have resolved the necessity of all inferior events into the free determination of God himself; who executes necessarily, that which he first proposed freely. South's Sermon.

NECESSARINESS. n. f. [from necessary.] The state of being necessary.

NECESSARY. adj. [necessarius, Latin.]

Against his maker: no decree of mine

Concurring to necessitate his fall. Milton's Par. Lost.

Our voluntary service he requires,

Not our necessitated. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Neither the Divine Providence, or his determinations, persuasions, or inflexions of the understanding, or will of rational creatures doth decide the understanding, or prevent the will, or necessitate or incline either to any moral evil.

The politician never thought that he might fall dangerously sick, and that sickness necessitate his removal from the court. South's Sermon.

Th' eternal, when he did the world create

And other agents did necessitate;

So what he order'd they by nature do;

Thus light things mount, and heavy downward go,

Man only boasts an arbitrary state. Dryden.

The perfections of any person may create our veneration; his power, our fear; and his authority arising thence, a fervile and necessitated obedience; but love can be procured only by kindness. Rogers.

NECESSITATION. n. f. [from necessitate.] The act of making necessary; fatal compulsion.

This necessity, grounded upon the necessitation of a man's will without his will, is so far from lessening those difficulties which flow from the fatal destiny of the Stoicks, that it increaseth them. Bramhall against Hobbs.

Where the law makes a certain heir, there is a necessitation to one; where the law doth not name a certain heir, there is no necessitation to one, and there they have power or liberty to choose. Bramhall against Hobbs.

NECESSITIED. adj. [from necessitate.] In a state of want. Not used.

1. The business of a sempstress.
2. Embroidery by the needle.

In needlework and embroideries, it is more pleasing to have a lively work upon a lightsome ground, than a dark and melancholy work upon a lightsome ground. Bacon.
In a curious brede of needlework, one colour falls away by such just degrees, and another rises to infinitely, that we see the variety without being able to distinguish the total variation of the one from the first appearance of the other.
Addison's Ess. on the Georgicks.

NEEDLESSLY. adv. [from needleless.] Unnecessarily; without need.
We render languages more difficult to be learnt, and need- lessly advance orthography into a troublesome art. Holder.

NEEDLESSNESS. n. f. [from needleless.] Unnecessariness.
To explain any of St. Paul's Epistles, after so great a train of expositors, might seem censurable for its needlelessness, did not the daily examples of pious and learned men justify
it. Lake's Ess. on St. Paul's Epistles.

NEEDLESS. adj. [from need.]
1. Unnecessary; not requisite.
Their exception against casiness, as if that did pourish

There where no fathers, brothers, friends disgrace,
Once break their rest nor stir them from their place. Pope.

NEPHEW. n. f. [nepos, Latin; neveu, French.]

1. The son of a brother or sister.
Immortal offspring of my brother Jove;
My brightest nephew and whom best I love. Dryden.
I ask, whether in the inheriting of this paternal power, the grandson by a daughter, hath a right before a nephew by a brother? Locke.

2. The grandson. Out of use.
With what intent they were first published, those words of the nepe of Jesus do plainly enough signify, after that my grand-father Jesus had given himself to the reading of the law and the prophets, and other books of our fathers, and had gotten therein sufficient judgment, he propos'd alto to write something pertaining to learning and wisdom.
Hosker, b. v. f. 21.

Her fire at length is kind,
Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas. Dryden.

3. Descendant, however distant. Out of use.
All the sons of these five brethren reign'd
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even three eleven descents the crown retain'd. Fairy 2.

but some samples I have seen of it that are variegated with white, black, and sometimes yellow. Woodw. Met. Foss.

NEPOTISM. n. f. [nepotisme, French; nepos, Latin.] Fondness for nephews.

To this humour of nepotism Rome owes its present splendor; for it would have been impossible to have furnished out so many glorious palaces with such a profusion of pictures and statues, had not the riches of the people fallen into different families. Addison on Italy.

NERVE. n. f. [nervus, Latin; νεῦρον, Fr.] The organs of sensation passing from the brain to all parts of the body.

The nerve do ordinarily accompany the arteries through all the body; they have also blood-vessels, as the other parts of the body. Wherever any nerve sends out a branch, or receives one from another, or where two *nerve*s join together, there is generally a ganglion or plexus. Quincy.

What man dare, I dare;
Approach thou like the rugged Ruffian bear;
Like any shape but that, and my firm *nerve*s
Shall never tremble. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. It is used by the poets for sinew or tendon.
Strong Tharyfied discharged a speeding blow
Full on his neck, and cut the nerve in two. Pope's Odyssey.

NERVELESS. adj. [from nerve.] Without strength.

There sunk Thalia, nerveless, faint and dead,
Had not her sister Satire held her head. Dunciad, b. iv.

NERVOUS. adj. [nervosus, Latin.] Well strung; strong; vigorous.

What nervous arms he boasts, how firm his tread,
His limbs how turn'd. Pope's Odyssey, b. viii.

shalt not take the dam with the young. Deut. xxii. 6.

2. Any place where animals are produced.

Redi found that all kinds of putrefaction did only afford a nest and aliment for the eggs and young of those insects he admitted. Bentley.

3. An abode; place of residence; a receptacle. Generally in a bad sense: as, a nest of rogues and thieves.

Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep. Shaksp.

4. A warm close habitation, generally in contempt.

Some of our ministers having livings offered unto them, will neither, for zeal of religion, nor winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nefts. Speyer.

5. Boxes or drawers; little pockets or conveniences.

To NEST. v. n. [from neft.] To build nests.

The cedar stretched his branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and the king of birds nefted within his leaves. Houel's Veal Forst.

NESTEGG. n. f. [neft and egg.] An egg left in the nest to keep the hen from forsaking it.

Books and money laid for neft,
Like nefteggs, to make chickens lay. Hudibras.

To NESTLE. v. n. [from neft.] To settle; to harbour; to lie close and snug, as a bird in her nest.

Their purpose was, to fortify in some strong place of the wild country, and there neftle till greater succours came.

A cock got into a stable was neftling in the straw among the horses. L'Estrange.

The king's sifter wents commonly by the water-side, and neftles in hollow banks. L'Estrange.

Flut'ring there they neftle near the throne,
And lodge in habitations not their own. Dryden.

The floor is strowed with several plants, amongst which the snails neftle all the winter. Addison on Italy.

Mark where the fly directors creep,
Nor to the shore approach too nigh;
The monsters neftle in the deep. Swift's Mijid.

To NESTLE. v. a.

1. To house, as in a nest.

That labour't yet to neftle thee,
Thou think'st by how'ring here to get a part,
In a forbidden or forbidding tree. Dante.

Cupid found a downy bed,
And neftled in his little head. Prior.

2. To cherish, as a bird her young.

This Ithacus, so highly is endear'd
To this Minerva; that her hand is ever in his deeds:
She, like his mother, neftles him. Chapman's Iliad.

NESTLING. n. f. [from neftle.] A bird just taken out of the nest.

NET. n. f. [net, Gothick; net, Saxon.] A texture woven with large interstices or meshes, used commonly as a snare for animals.

Poor bird! thou'd'st never fear the net, nor lime,
The pitfall nor the gin. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He made nets of chequer-work for the chapters, upon the top of the pillars. 1 Kings vii. 17.

Impatience intangles us like the fluttering of a bird in a net, but cannot at all ease our trouble. Taylor's Holy Living.

The vegetative tribes,
Wrapt in a filmy net, and clad with leaves. Thomson.

NETHER. adj. [neoter, Saxon; neoter, Dutch. It has the form of a comparative, but is never used in expressed, but only in implied comparison; for we see the neoter part, but never say this part is neoter than that, nor is any positive use, though it seems comprised in the word beneath. Neoter is not now much in use.]

1. Lower; not upper.

NEV

No man shall take the neoter or the upper millstone to pledge; for he taketh a man's life to pledge. Deut. xxiv. 6.
In his picture are two principal errors, the one in the complexion and hair, the other in the mouth, which commonly they draw with a full and neoter great lip. Peacham.

This odious offspring,
Thine own begotten, breaking violent way
Tore through my entrails; that with fear and pain
Distorted, all my neoter shape thus grew Transform'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

The upper part thereof was whey, Hudibras, p. i.

The neoter, orange mix'd with grey.

A beauteous maid above, but magic arts,
With barking dogs below, her neoter parts. Reformen.

As if great Atlas from his height
Shou'd sink beneath his heavy weight,
And with a mighty flaw, the flaming wall Shou'd gape immense, and rushing down o'erwhelm this neoter ball. Dryden.

Two poles turn round the globe;
The first sublime in heaven, the last is whirl'd
Below the regions of the neoter world. Dryden.

2. Being in a lower place.

This shews you are above,
You justices, that these our neoter crimes,
So freely can venge. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Numbetits were those bad angels, seen
Hov'ring on wing under the cope of hell,
Twixt upper, neoter, and frowning fires. Milton.

3. Infernal; belonging to the regions below.

No left desire
To found this neoter empire, which might rise,
In emulation, opposite to heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.

The gods with hate beheld the neoter sky,
The ghosts repine. Dryden's Æn.

NE'ERMOST. n. f. [neoter of neoter.] Lowest.

Great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the neotermost hell. Psalm lxxxvi. 13.

Undaunted to meet there whatever pow'rs
Or spirits, of the neotermost abyss Might in that noise reside. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

All that can be said of a liar lodged in the very neotermost hell, is this, that if the vengeance of God could prepare any place worse than hell for sinners, hell itself would be too good for him.

Heracles tells us, that the eclipse of the sun was after the manner of a boat, when the concave, as to our sight, appears uppermost, and the convex neotermost. Keilaga-Bar.

NE'ETING. n. f. A reticulated piece of work.

NE'ETLE. n. f. [neoter, Saxon.] A stinging herb well known.

It hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many stamina included in an empalement; but these are barren; for the embryos are produced either on different plants, or on different parts of the same plant, without any visible flower, which becomes a bivalve feed-vessel, sometimes gathered into round heads, and at other times small and hairy, including several seeds. Miller.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best, Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality. Shaksp. Hen. V.

Some so like to thorns and nettles live,
That none for them can, when they perish, grieve. Waller.

To NETTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To sting; to irritate;
to provoke.

The princes were so nettled at the scandal of this affront, that every man took it to himself. L'Estrange.

Although at every part of the Apostles discourse some of them might be uneasy and nettled, yet a moderate silence and attention was still observed. Bentley.

NE'TWORK. n. f. [net and work.] Any thing reticulated or decussated, at equal distances, with interstices between the interstices.

Nor any skill'd in workmanship embos'd;
Nor any skill'd in loops of fing'ring fine;
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare,
With this so curious network to compare. Spenser.

A large cavity in the incipit was filled with ribbons, lace, and embroidery, wrought together in a curious piece of network. Addison's Spectator.

NE'VER. adv. [ne ever, nepe, Saxon; ne epepe, not ever.]

1. At no time.

2. It is used in a form of speech handed down by the best writers, but lately accused, I think, with justice, of sole-cism; as, he is mistaken though never so wise. It is now maintained, that propriety requires it to be expressed thus, he is mistaken though ever so wise; that is, he is mistaken how wise soever he be. The common mode can only be defended by supplying a very harsh and unprecedented ellipsis; he is mistaken though so wise, as never was any: such however is the common use of the word among the best authors.

By its own force destroy'd, fruition ceas'd,
And always weary'd, I was never pleas'd. Prior.

NEU

Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man.
Congreve's Way of the World.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions. Hosker.

Alas me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say. Gen. xxiv. 12.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body, instantly make a transfusion throughout the whole body. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

They destroyed all, were it never so pleasant, within a mile of the town. Knight's Hist. of the Turks.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light, would not be brought to see that which he had no mind to see, let it be placed in never so clear a light, and never so near him.

That prince whom you espouse, although never so vigorously, is the principal in war, you but a second. Swift.

3. In no degree.

Whosoever has a faithful friend to guide him, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse.

4. It seems in some phrases to have the sense of an adjective.

Not any.

He answered him to never a word, inasmuch that the governour marvelled. Matt. xxvii. 14.

5. It is much used in composition; as, never-ending, having no end; of which some examples are subjoined.

Nature assureth us by never-failing experience, and reason by infallible demonstration, that our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never fear,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude. Milton.

Your never-failing sword made war to cease,
And now you heal us with the acts of peace. Waller.

So corn in fields, and in the garden flow'rs,
Revive and raise themselves with moderate show'rs;
But over-charge'd with never-ceasing rain,
Become too moist. Waller.

Our heroes of the former days,
Deserv'd and gain'd their never-fading bays: Reformen.

Not Thracian Orpheus should traueise my lays,
Nor Linus crown'd with never-fading bays. Dryden.

Leucippus, with his never-erring dart. Dryd. Ovid.

Farewel, ye never-opening gates.

He to quench his drought to much inclin'd,
May flow'ry fields and nitrous pastures find;
Meet stores of cold to greedily pursu'd,
And be refresh'd with never-waiting food. Blackmore.

Norton hung down his never-blushing head,
And all was hush'd, as folly's self lay dead. Pope's Dunci.

What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

Thy busy never-meaning face,
Thy crew'd up front, thy state grimace. Swift.

NE'VER-THISS. adv. [never the less.] Notwithstanding that.

They plead that even such ceremonies of the church of Rome as contain in them nothing which is not of itself agreeable to the word of God, ought nevertheless to be abolished. Hosker, b. iv.

Many of our men were gone to land, and our ships ready to depart; nevertheless the admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth towards them. Bacon.

Creation must needs infer providence; and God's making the world, irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of a dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South's Sermons.

NEUROLOGY. n. f. [νεῦρον and λόγος.] A description of the *nerve*s.

NE'UROTONY. n. f. [νεῦρον and τόνος.] The anatomy of the
*nerve*s.

NEUTER. adj. [neuter, Latin; neutres, Fr.]

1. Indifferent; not engaged on either side.

The general division of the British nation is into whigs and Tories; there being very few, if any, who stand neuter in the dispute, without ranging themselves under one of these denominations. Addison's Freeholder, N. 54.

2. [In grammar.] A noun that implies no sex.

The adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make it grammar. Dryden.

A verb neuter is that which signifies neither action nor passion, but some state or condition of being; as, sedes, I sit. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

NEUTER. n. f. One indifferent and unengaged.

The learned heathens may be looked upon as neuters in the matter, when all these prophecies were new to them, and their education had left the interpretation of them indifferent. Addison on the Christian Religion.

NEW

NEUTRAL. adj. [neutral, French.]

1. Indifferent; not acting; not engaged on either side.
Who can be wife, amaz'd, temperate and furious,
Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man. Shakespeare.
He no sooner heard that king Henry was settled by his victory, but forthwith he sent ambassadors unto him, to pray that he would stand neutral. Bacon's Hen. VII.
The allies may be supplied for money, from Denmark and other neutral states. Addison on the War.

2. Indifferent; neither good nor bad.
Some things good, and some things ill do seem,
And neutral some, in her fantastic eye. Davies.

3. Neither acid nor alkaline.
Salts which are neither acid nor alkaline, are called neutral. Arbutnot.
NEUTRAL. n. f. One who does not act nor engage on either side.

The treacherous who have misled others, and the neutrals and the false-hearted friends and followers, who have flattered aside like a broken bow, are to be noted. Bacon.

NEUTRALITY. n. f. [neutralité, French.]
1. A state of indifference; of neither friendship nor hostility.
Men who possess a state of neutrality in times of public danger, desert the common interest of their fellow-subjects.
Addison.

The king, late griefs revolving in his mind,
These reasons for neutrality assign'd. Garth's Ovid.
All pretences to neutrality are justly exploded, only intending the safety and ease of a few individuals, while the public is embroiled. This was the opinion and practice of the latter Cato. Swift.

2. A state between good and evil.
There is no health: physicians say, that we
At best enjoy but a neutrality. Dennis.
NEUTRALLY. adv. [from neutral.] Indifferently; on neither part.

NEW. adj. [newydd, Welsh; neop, Saxon; neuf, Fr.]
1. Not old; fresh; lately produced, made or had; novel. It is used of things: as, young of persons.

What's the newness grief?
—That of an hour's age doth his the speaker;
Each minute teems a new one. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Do not all men complain how little we know, and how much is still unknown? And can we ever know more, unless something new be discovered? Burnet.

2. Modern; of the present time.
Whoever converses much among old books, will be something hard to please among new. Temple's Miscellanies.

3. Not antiquated; having the effect of novelty.
There names infer'd unnumber'd ages past,
From time's first birth, with time itself shall last;
These ever new, nor subject to decays,
Spread and grow brighter with the length of days. Pope.

4. Not habituated; not familiar.
Such assemblies, though had for religion's sake, may serve the turn of heretics, and such as privily will inflame their poison into new minds. Hooker, b. v.

Seiz'd with wonder and delight,
Gaz'd all around me, new to the transporting sight. Dryden.

Twelve mules, a strong laborious race,
New to the plough, unpractis'd in the trace. Pope.

5. Renovated; repaired, so as to recover the first state.
Men after long emaciating diets, wax plump, fat, and almost
new. Bacon's Natural History.

6. Fresh after any thing.
Nor dare we trust so soft a messenger,
New from her sickness to that northern air. Dryden.

7. Not of ancient extraction.
A superior capacity for business, and a more extensive knowledge, are steps by which a new man often mounts to favour, and outshines the rest of his contemporaries. Addison.
NEW. adv. This is, I think, only used in composition for newly, which the following examples may explain.

As soon as he had written them, a new swarm of thoughts flung her mind, the was ready with her foot to give the new-born letters both to death and burial. Sidney, b. ii.

God hath not then left this to chafe that, neither would reject that to chafe this, were it not for some new-grown occasion, making that which hath been better worse. Hooker.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joyance of his new-come guest. Fairy 2.

Who are the violets now
That strow the green lap of the new-come spring. Shakespeare.

Your master's lines
Are full of new-found oaths; which he will break
As easily as I do tear this paper. Shakespeare.

Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriendly, new-adapted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,

NEW

Take her or leave her?

Left by a multitude Shakespeare's King Lear.
The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out. Shakespeare.
Bow, stubborn knees; and heart with strings of steel
Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe. Shakespeare's Ham.
And I a gasping, new-deliver'd mother,
Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd. Shakespeare, R. II.

I am in parliament pledge for his truth,
And lasting fealty to the new-made king. Shakespeare, R. II.
He saw heav'n blossom with a new-born light,
On which, as on a glorious stranger gaz'd
The golden eyes of night; whose beams made bright
The way to Beth'lem, and as boldly blaz'd;
Nor ask'd leave of the sun, by day as night. Crawford.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day;
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night,
When a ruddy storm, whose foul
Made heaven's radiant face look foul,
Call'd for an untimely night

To blot the newly blossom'd light. Crawford.
Some tree, whose broad smooth leaves together low'd,
And girded on our loins, may cover round
Those middle parts; that this new-come shame,
There fit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton, P. L.

Their father's state,
And new-entrusted sceptre. Milton's Poem.
The new-created world, which came in heav'n Long had foretold. Milton's Paradise Lost.

His evil.
Thou wast, and from thence createst more good,
Witness this new-made world, another heav'n. Milton.
All clad in liveliest colours, fresh and fair
As the bright flowers that crown'd their brighter hair;
All in that new-blown age which does inspire Warmth in themselves, in their beholders fire. Cowley.

While from above adorn'd with radiant light,
A new-born sun surpris'd the dazzled sight. Rowlandson.
If it could, yet that it should always run them into such a machine as is already extant, and not often into some new-fashioned one, such as was never seen before, no reason can be assigned or imagined. Rowlandson.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition, there being several additional chapters in it, and several new-moulded. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
New-found lands accrue to the prince whose subject makes the first discovery. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Let this be nature's frailty, or her fate,
Or Igrim's counsel, her new-chosen mate. Dryden.
When the flood in its own depths was drown'd,
It left behind it false and slippery ground;
And the more solemn pomp was still defer'd,
'Till new-born nature in fresh looks appear'd. Dryden.

Shewn all at once you dazzled so our eyes,
As new-born Pallas did the Gods surprize;
When springing forth from Jove's new-clothing wound,
She struck the warlike spear into the ground. Dryden.

A bird new-made, about the banks the pines,
Not far from shore, and short excursions tries. Dryden.
Our house has sent to-day
T'insure our new-built vessel, call'd a play. Dryden.

'Twas easy now to guess from whence arose,
Her new-made union with her ancient foes. Dryden.
Then curds and cream,
And new-laid eggs, which Baucis' busy care
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden, Baucis.

When pleading Matho, born abroad for air,
With his fat paunch fills his new-fashioned chair. Dryden.
A new-form'd faction does your power oppose,
The fight's confus'd, and all who met were foes. Dryden.

If thou ken't from far
Among the Pleiads a new-kindled star;
If any sparkles than the rest more bright. Dryden.
'Tis she that shines in that propitious light.
If we consider new-born children, we shall have little reason to think that they bring many ideas into the world with them. Locke.

Drummers with vellum-thunder shake the pile,
To greet the new-made bride. Gay's Trivia.
Ah Blouzelind! I love thee more by half,
Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf. Gay's Pastoral.

The proctor exhibits his proxy from the dean and chapter, and presents the new-elected bishop to the vicar-general. Swift's Parergon.

The new-fallen young here blencing for their dams,
The larger here, and there the lesser lambs. Pope.
A new-married man and an ass, are bride-led; an old-married man and a pack-horse, sadd-led. Arbutnot, and Pope.

NEW

Learn all the new-fashion words and oaths. Swift.
NEW-FANGLED. adj. [new and fangle.] Formed with vain or foolish love of novelty.

At Christmas I no more desire a rose,
Than with a snow in May's new-fangled shows; Shakespeare.
But like of each thing, that in season grows.
Those charities are not new-fangled devices of yesterday, but are most of them as old as the reformation. Atterbury.

NEW-FANGLEDNESS. n. f. [from new-fangled.] Vain and
NEW-FANGLEDNESS. n. f. [from new-fangled.] Vain and
NEW-FANGLEDNESS. n. f. [from new-fangled.] Vain and
NEW-FANGLEDNESS. n. f. [from new-fangled.] Vain and

So to new-fangleness both of manner, apparel, and each thing else, by the custom of self-guilty evil, glad to change thing often for a worse. Sidney, b. ii.
Yet he them in new-fangleness did pass. Hubbard's Tale.

The women would be loth to come behind the fashion in new-fangleness of the manner, if not in collines of the matter. Carew.

NEW-FANGLEDNESS. n. f. [from new-fangled.] Vain and
NEW-FANGLEDNESS. n. f. [from new-fangled.] Vain and
NEW-FANGLEDNESS. n. f. [from new-fangled.] Vain and

1. The compass round which the staircase is carried.
Let the stairs to the upper rooms be upon a fair open newel, and finely rail'd in. Bacon, Essay 46.

2. Newel; novelty.
NEWING. n. f. [from new.] Yest or barm.
NEWLY. adv. [from new.] Freshly; lately.
Such is the power of that sweet passion,
That it all forlorn baseness doth repel,
And the refined mind doth newly fashion
Into a fairer form. Spenser's Hymn on Love.

Her breath indeed those hands have newly stopp'd. Shakespeare.
They newly learned by the king's example, that attainders do not interrupt the conveying of title to the crown. Bacon.

Her lips were red, and one was thin,
Compar'd to that was next her chin;
Some bee had stung it newly. Suckling.

Then rubb'd it o'er with newly gather'd mint. Dryden.
NEWNESS. n. f. [from new.] Freshness; lateness; novelty; recentness; state of being new.

His device was to come without any device, all in white like a new knight, but so new as his newness shamed most of the others long exercise. Sidney, b. ii.

Away, my friends, new flight;
And happy newness that intends old right. Shakespeare.
Words borrowed of antiquity do lend majesty to stile, they have the authority of years, and out of their intermission do win to themselves a kind of grace-like newness. B. John.

Their stories, if they had been preserved, and what else was then performed in that newness of the world, there could nothing of more delight have been left to posterity.

In these disturbances,
And newness of a way'ing government,
'T'avenge them of their former grievances. Dan. C. War.

Newness in great matters, was a worthy entertainment for a searching mind; it was an high taste, fit for the relish.
South's Sermons.

There are some newnesses of English, translated from the beauties of modern tongues, as well as from the elegances of the latin; and here and there some old words are sprinkled, which for their significance and found, deserved not to be antiquated. Dryden's Don Quixote.

When Horace writ his satyrs, the monarchy of his Cæsar was in its newness, and the government but just made easy to his conquered people. Dryden's Juvenal.

NEWS. n. f. without the singular, [from new, novelles, Fr.]
1. Fresh account of any thing; something not heard before.
As he was ready to be greatly advanced for some noble pieces of service which he did, he heard news of me. Sidney.

When Rhea heard these news, she fled from her husband to her brother Saturn. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Evil news rides fast, while good news baits. Milt. Agonist.
With such amazement as weak mothers use,
And frantic gesture, he receives the news. Waller.

Now the books, and now the bells,
And now our ad the preacher tells,
To edify the people;
All our divinity is news,
And we have made of equal use
The pulpit and the steeple.

The antizing news of Charles at once was spread,
At once the general voice declared
Our gracious prince was dead. Dryden.

It is no news for the weak and poor to be a prey to the strong and rich. L'Estrange.

They have new-gatherers and intelligencers distributed into their several walks, who bring in their respective quotas, and make them acquainted with the discourse of the whole kingdom. Spektator, N^o. 439.

2. Papers which give an account of the transactions of the present times.
Their papers, filled with a different party spirit, divide the people into different sentiments, who generally consider rather the principles than the truth of the news-writer. Addison.

NIB

Advertise both in every news-paper; and let it not be your fault or mine, if our country-men will not take warning. Swift's Drapier's Letters.

Wood is generally his own news-writer. I cannot but observe from that paragraph, that this public enemy treats this kingdom with contempt. Swift's Drapier's Letters.

Pamphlets and news-papers have been full of me. Pope.
NEWS-MONGER. n. f. [news and monger.] One that deals in news; one whose employment it is to hear and to tell news.

Many tales devis'd,
Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear, Shakespeare.
By smiling pick-thanks and base news-mongers.

This was come as a judgment upon him for laying aside his father's will, and turning stock-jobber, news-monger, and busy body, meddling with other peoples affairs. Arbutnot.

NEWS-MONGER. n. f. [news and monger.] One that deals in news; one whose employment it is to hear and to tell news.

Oh thou! whose self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puffed,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue,
The gilded newt, and eyeless venom'd worm. Shakespeare.

Newts and blind worms do no wrong;
Come not near our fairy queen. Shakespeare, M. Night's Dream.

Such humidity is observed in newts and water-lizards, especially if their skins be perforated or pricked. Brown's P. Err.

NEW-YEAR'S-GIFT. n. f. [new, year, and gift.] Present made on the first day of the year.

If I be served such a trick, I'll have my brains taken out and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new-year's-gift.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

When he sat on the throne distributing new-year's-gifts, he had his altar of incense by him, that before they received gifts they might cast a little incense into the fire; which all good christians refused to do. Stillingfleet.

NEXT. adj. [next, Saxon, by a colloquial change from nept or nypt, the superlative of nep or ny; nept, scotish.]
1. Nearest in place; immediately succeeding in order.

Want supplieth itself of what is next, and many times the next way. Bacon, Essay 14.

The queen already fat
High on a golden bed; her princely guest
Was next her side, in order sat the rest. Dryden, Virg. Æn.

The next in place and punishment were they,
Who prodigally throw their souls away. Dryden, Æn. vi.

2. Nearest in any gradation.
If the king himself had stayed at London, or, which had been the next best, kept his court at York, and sent the army on their proper errand, his enemies had been speedily subdued. Clarendon.

O fortunate young man! at least your lays
Are next to his, and claim the second praise. Dryden.
Finite and infinite, being by the mind looked on as modifications of expansion and duration, the next thing to be considered, is, how the mind comes by them. Locke.

That's a difficulty next to impossible.
NEXT. adv. At the time or turn immediately succeeding.

Th' unwary nymph
Desir'd of Jove, when next he sought her bed,
To grant a certain gift. Addison's Ovid Metam. b. iii.

NIB. n. f. [niais, French.] Simple, silly, and foolish.
A nias hawk is one taken newly from the nest, and not able to help itself; and hence nias, a silly person. Bailey.

NIB. n. f. [nieb, Saxon, the face; niebe, Dutch, the bill.]
1. The bill or beak of a bird. See Nib.

2. The point of any thing, generally of a pen.
A tree called the bejico, which twines about other trees, with its end hanging downwards, travellers cut the nib off it, and presently a spout of water runs out from it as clear as crystal. Darham.

NIBBLED. adj. [from nib.] Having a nib.
TO NIBBLE. v. a. [from nib, the beak or mouth.]
1. To bite by little at a time; to eat slowly.

Thy turf mountains, where live nibbling sheep,
And flat meads thatch'd with flower them to keep. Shakespeare.
It is the rose that bleeds, when he Nibbles his nice phlebotomy. Cleveland's Poems.

Had not he better have born warts nibbling of his plants and roots now, than the huntman's eating of him out of house and home. L'Estrange, Fable 387.

Many there are who nibble without leave;
But none, who are not born to taste, survive. Gravill.

2. To bite as a fish does the bait.
The roving trout
Greedy sucks in the twining bait,
And tugs and nibbles at the fallacious meat. Gay.

TO NIBBLE. v. n.
1. To bite at.
As pigeons bill, so wedlock would be nibbling. Shakespeare.

They

NIC

They gaze at rich revenues which you hold,
And fain would nibble at your grandame gold.
But if you would be nibbling, here is a hand to stay your stomach.
Dryden.
Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Plunging himself in mud, and then lifting up his head a little, he casts out the said string; which the little fishes taking for a worm, and nibbling at it, he immediately plucks them both in together.
Grew's Museum.

2. To carp at; to find fault with.
Instead of returning a full answer to my book, he manifestly falls a nibbling at one single passage in it.
Tillot. Pref.

NIBBLER. n. f. [from nibble.] One that bites by little at a time.

NICE. adj. [nece, Saxon, soft.]

1. Accurate in judgment to minute exactness; superfluously exact. It is often used to express a culpable delicacy.
Such a man was Argalus, as hardly the nicest eye can find a spot in.
Sidney.

He that stands upon a slippery place,
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up.
Nor be so nice in taste myself to know,
If what I swallow be a thrush or no.
Shak. K. John.

Thus critics, of less judgment than caprice,
Cautious, not knowing, not exact, but nice,
Form their ideas, and offend in arts,
As most in manners, by a love to parts.
Pope on Crit.

Our author, happy in a love to parts,
Produce'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice.
Pope.

2. Delicate; scrupulously and minutely cautious.

The letter was not nice, but full of charge
Of dear import.
Dear love! continue nice and chaste;
For if you yield, you do me wrong;
Let duller wits to love's end haste,
I have enough to woo thee long.
Donne.

Of honour men at first like women nice,
Raise maiden scruples at unpractis'd vice.
E. Hallifax.

Having been compiled by Gratian, in an ignorant age, we ought not to be too nice in examining it.

3. Fastidious; squeamish.

God hath here
Varied his bounty so with new delights,
As may compare with heaven; and to taste,
Think not I shall be nice.
Milt. Par. Lost.

L'Estrange.

My progress in making this nice and troublesome experiment, I have let down more at large.
Newton's Opt.

7. Refined.

A nice and subtle happiness I see Thou to thyself propofest, in the choice
Of thy associates, Adam; and wilt taste
No pleasure, tho' in pleasure solitary.
Milt. P. Lost.

8. Having lucky hits. This signification is not in use.

When my hours
Were nice and lucky, men did random lives
Of me for jests.
Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

NICELY. adv. [from nice.]

1. Accurately; minutely; scrupulously.

These kind of knaves in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silky ducking observants
That stretch their duties nicely.
Shakespeare's K. Lear.

What mean those ladies which, as tho'
They were to take a clock to pieces, go
So nicely about the bride?
Donne.

He ought to study the grammar of his own tongue, that he may understand his own country-speech nicely, and speak it properly.
Locke.

The next thing of which the doses ought to be nicely determined, are opiates.
Arbutnot on Cato.

At nicely carving shew thy wit;
But ne'er presume to eat a bit.
Swift's Miscell.

Where's now that labour'd niceness in thy dress,
And all those arts that did the spark express?
Dryden.

2. Superfluous delicacy or exactness.

A strange niceness were it in me to refrain that from the ears of a person representing so much worthiness, which I am glad even to rocks and woods to utter.
Sidney.

NIC

Unlike the niceness of our modern dames,
Affected nymphs, with new affected names,
Nor place them where
Roast crabs offend the niceness of their nose.
Dryden.

NICETY. n. f. [from nice.]

1. Minute accuracy of thought.

Nor was this nicety of his judgment confined only to literature, but was the same in all other parts of art.
Prior.

NICHAR. n. f.

The characters are: it hath a polypetalous or a monopetalous flower, cut very deeply into several segments, but is almost of an anomalous figure; from whose calyx arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a pod, beset all over with prickles, in which are contained one or two round hard seeds.

NICHE. n. f. [French.] A hollow in which a statue may be placed.

Niches, containing figures of white stone or marble, should not be coloured in their concavity too black.
Warton.

They not from temples, nor from gods refrain,
But the poor lares from the niches seize,
If they be little images that please.
Dryden.

On the south a long majestic race
Of Egypt's priests, the gilded niches grace.
Pope.

The hairs to titles and large estates are well enough qualified to read pamphlets against religion and high-flying, whereby they fill their niches, and carry themselves through the world with that dignity which befit becomes a senator and a squire.

NICK. n. f. [nick, Teutonic, the twinkling of an eye.]

1. Exact point of time at which there is necessity or convenience.

That great instrument of state had foreknowledge of it, but suffered the fatal thread to be spun out to that length for some political respects, and then to cut it off in the very nick.
Houel's Peal Forge.

What in our watches that in us is found,
So to the height and nick we up be wound,
No matter by what hand or trick.
Swelling.

That trick,
Had it come in the nick,
Had touch'd us to the quick.
Derham.

Though dame fortune seem to smile,
And leer upon him for a while;
She'll after shew him in the nick
Of all his glories a dog trick.
Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.

And some with symbols, signs, and tricks,
Engraved in planetary nicks,
With their own influences will fetch them Down from their orbs, arrest and catch them.

You unlance your reputation,
And spend your rich opinion for the name
Of a night-bravaler. Shaksp. Othello.
NIGHTCAP, n. f. [night and cap.] A cap worn in bed, or in undress.
The rattlement houted, and clapt their chopt hands,
And threw up their sweaty night-caps. Shaksp. Jul. Cesar.
Great mountains have a perception of the disposition of the air to tempests sooner than the vallies below; and therefore they say in Wales, when certain hills have their night-caps on, they mean mischief. Bacon's Nat. History.
How did the humbled swain detest
His prickly beard, and hairy breast!
His night-cap border'd round with lace,
Could give no softness to his face. Swift's Poems.
NIGHTCROW, n. f. [night and crow.] A bird that cries in the night.
The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign;
The night-crow cry'd, a boding luckless time. Shaksp.
NIGHTDEW, n. f. [night and dew.] Dew that wets the ground in the night.
All things are hush'd, as nature's self lay dead,
The mountains seem to nod their drowsy head;
The little birds in dreams their songs repeat,
And sleeping flowers beneath the night-dew sweat;
E'en lust and envy sleep. Dryden's Ind. Emperor.
NIGHTDOG, n. f. [night and dog.] A dog that hunts in the night. Used by deer-stealers.

Thro' the mid seas the nimble pinnace sails,
Aloof from Crete before the northern gales. Pope.
NIMBLENESS, n. f. [from nimble.] Quickness; activity; speed; agility; readiness; dexterity; celerity; expedition; swiftness.
The hounds were straight uncoupled, and ere long the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.
Himself shewing at one instant both steadiness and nimbleness. Sidney, b. ii.
All things are therefore partakers of God; they are his offspring, his influence is in them, and the personal wisdom of God is for that very cause said to excel in nimbleness or agility, to pierce into all intellectual, pure and subtle spirits, to go through all, and to reach unto every thing which is. Hooker, b. v. f. 5.
We, lying still,
Are full of rest, defence and nimbleness. Shaksp.
Ovid ranged over all Parnassus with great nimbleness and agility; but as he did not much care for the toil requisite to climb the upper part of the hill, he was generally roving about the bottom. Addison's Guardian, No. 115.

NIP

NIMBLEWITTED, adj. [nimble and wit.] Quick; eager to speak.
Sir Nicholas Bacon, when a certain nimble-witted counsellor at the bar, who was forward to speak, did interrupt him often, said unto him, There is a great difference between you and me; a pain to me to speak, and a pain to twixt you and me; a pain to me to speak, and a pain to you to hold your peace. Bacon, Apophth. 124.
NIMBLY, adv. [from nimble.] Quickly; speedily; actively.
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious playing of a lute. Sha. Rich. III.

NINE, n. f. [niun, Gothic; nigon, Saxon.] One more than eight; one less than ten.
The veyward sisters,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine and thrice to mine,
And thrice again, to make up nine. Shaksp. Macbeth.
A thousand scruples may startle at first, and yet in conclusion prove but a nine-days wonder. L'Estrange.
The faults are nine in ten owing to affectation, and not to the want of understanding. Swift's Miscell.
NINEFOLD, n. f. [nine and fold.] Nine times; any thing nine times repeated.
This huge convex of fire,
Outrageous to devour, immures us round ninefold. Milt.
NINEPENNY, n. f. [nine and penny.] A silver coin valued at nine-pence.
Three silver pennies, and a nine-penny bent. Gay's Past.
NINEPINS, n. f. [nine and pin.] A play where nine pieces of wood are set up on the ground to be thrown down by a bowl.
A painter made blossoms upon the trees in December, and school-boys playing at nine-pins upon the ice in July. Peacock on Drawing.
For as when merchants break, o'erthrown
Like nine-pins, they strike others down. Had. p. ii.
NINESCORE, adj. [nine and score.] Nine times twenty.
Eugenius has two hundred pounds a year; but never values himself above nine-score, as not thinking he has a right to the tenth part, which he always appropriates to charitable uses. Addison's Spectator, No. 177.
NINETEEN, adj. [nigontyne, Saxon.] Nine and ten; one less than twenty.
Nineteen in twenty of perplexing words might be changed into easy ones, such as occur to ordinary men. Swift.

In the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzaradan. 2 Kings xxv. 8.
NINETY, adj. [niunigonty, Saxon.] Nine times ten.
Enos lived ninety years and begat Cainan. Gen. v. 9.
NINTH, adj. [negota, Saxon.] That which precedes the tenth; the first after the eighth; the ordinal of nine.
Upon a strict observation of many, I have not found any that see the ninth day. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
NINTIETH, adj. [niunigonteoða, Saxon.] The ordinal of ninety; the tenth nine times told.
NINNY, n. f. [niunna, a child, Spanish.] A fool; a simpleton.
What a pidd ninny's this? Shaksp. Tempest.
The dean was so shabby, and look'd like a ninny,
That the captain suppos'd he was curate. Swift.
NINNYHAMMER, n. f. [from ninny.] A simpleton.
Another vents her passion in scurrilous terms; an old ninny-hammer, a dotard, a nincompoop, is the best language she can afford me. Addison's Guardian, No. 109.
Have you no more manners than to rail at Hocus, that has saved that clod-pated, numskull'd, ninny-hammer of yours from ruin, and all his family. Arbut. John Bull.
TO NIP, v. a. [nipen, Dutch.]
1. To pinch off with the nails; to bite with the teeth.
In oranges and lemons, the nipping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 388.
2. To cut off by any slight means.
The small shoots that extract the sap of the most leading branches, must be nip'd off. Mortimer's Hyst.
3. To blast; to destroy before full growth.
This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth

NIT

The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root;
And then he falls as I do. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

A flower doth spread and dye,
Thou would'st extend me to some good,
Before I were by frost's extremity nip in the bud. Herb.
His delivery now proves

Abortive, as the first-born bloom of spring,
Nip with the lagging rear of winter's frost. Milton.
Had he not been nipped in the bud, he might have made a formidable figure in his own works among posterity. Add.
From such encouragement it is easy to guess to what perfection I might have brought this great work, had it not been nip in the bud. Arbutnot's John Bull.

4. To pinch as frost.

The air bites shrewdly, it is very cold. —

—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

When fitches hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail;
When blood is nip, and ways be foul,
Then nighty fings the staring owl. Sba. Love's L. Lgt.

5. To vex; to bite.

And sharp remorse his heart did prick and nip,
That drops of blood thence like a well did play. Fairy Q.

6. To fatigue; to ridicule; to taunt sarcastically.

But the right gentle mind would bite his lip
To hear the jave! so good men to nip. Hobbes's Tale.

Quick wit commonly he in desire new-fangled; in purpose unconstant; bold with any person; busy in every matter; fooling such as be present, nipping any that is absent.

Afham's Schoolmaster.

NIP, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pinch with the nails or teeth.

I am sharply taunted, yea, sometimes with pinches, nips, and bobs. Afham's Schoolmaster.

2. A small cut.

What this a sleeve? 'tis like a demicannon;
What up and down car'd like an apple-tart?
Here's nip, and nip, and cut, and slash, and slash,
Like to a caner in a barber's shop. Shakespeare.

3. A blast.

So hasty fruits and too ambitious flow'rs,
Scorning the midwifery of rip'ning show'rs,
In flight of frosts, spring from th' unwilling earth,
But find a nip untimely as their birth. Stepney.

4. A taunt; a sarcasm.

NIPPER, n. f. [from nip.] A satirist. Out of use.

Ready backbiters, fore nippers, and spiteful reporters pively of good men. Afham.

NIPPER, n. f. [from nip.] Small pincers.

NIPPLE, n. f. [from nip.] With bitter sarcasm.

NIPPLE, n. f. [from nip.] With bitter sarcasm.

1. The teat; the dug; that which the sucking young take into their mouths.

Tho' tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me. —
I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have plucked my nipple from his boneless gums. Shakespeare.

In creatures that nourish their young with milk, are adapted the nipples of the breast to the mouth and organs of suction. Ray on the Creation.

2. The orifice at which any animal liquor is separated.

In most other birds there is only one gland, in which are divers little cells ending in two or three larger cells, lying under the nipple of the oil bag. Derham's Physica Theol.

NIPPLEWORT, n. f. [Lampfana.] A very common weed.

NISI PRIUS, n. f.

[In law.] A judicial writ, which lieth in case where the inquest is pannelled, and returned before the justices of the bank; the one party or the other making petition to have this writ for the case of the country. It is directed to the sheriff, commanding that he cause the men impanelled to come before the justices in the same county, for the determining of the cause there, except it be so difficult that it need great deliberation: in which case, it is sent again to the bank. It is so called from the first words of the writ nisi apud talem locum prius venerint; whereby it appeareth, that justices of assizes and justices of nisi prius, differ. So that justices of nisi prius, must be one of them before whom the cause is depending in the bench, with some other good men of the county associated to him. Cowd.

NIT, n. f. [pneus, Saxon.] The egg of a louse, or small animal.

The whame, or burrel-ay, is voracious to horses in summer, not by stinging them, but only by their bomblyous noise, or tickling them in sticking their nits, or eggs, on the hair. Derham's Physica Theol.

NITREX, n. f. [nitentia, Latin.]

1. Lustre; clear brightnels.

NIT

2. [From the Latin, nitro.] Endeavour; spring to expand itself.

The atoms of fire accelerate the motion of these particles;
from which acceleration their spring, or endeavour outward will be augmented; that is, those zones will have a strong nitency to fly wider open. Boyle.

NIT, n. f. A coward, dastard, poltroon.

NITID, adj. [nitidus, Latin.] Bright; shining; lustrous.

We restore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow, by putting them into fire and aqua fortis, which take off the adventitious filth. Boyle on Colours.

NITRE, n. f. [nitre, Fr. nitrum, Latin.]

The salt which we know at this time, under the name of nitre or salt-petre, is a crystalline pellucid, but somewhat whitish substance, of an acid and bitterish taste, impressing a peculiar sense of coldness upon the tongue. This salt, though it affords, by means of fire, an acid spirit capable of dissolving almost every thing, yet manifests no sign of its containing any acid at all in its crude state. Nitre is of the number of those salts which are naturally blended in imperceptible particles in earths, stones, and other solid substances, as the particles of metals are in their ores: it is sometimes however found pure, in form of an efflorescence, either on its ores or on the surface of old walls; these efflorences dissolved in proper water, shooting into regular and proper crystals of nitre. That this salt should be found on the surface of walls is not wonderful, since it is found only on or near the surface of the earth where it is produced.
The earth from which nitre is made, both in Persia and the East-Indies, is a kind of yellowish marl found in the bare cliffs of the sides of hills exposed to the northern and eastern winds, and never in any other situation. From this marl the salt is separated by water; but the crystals into which it shoots, as we receive them from the East-Indies, are small, imperfect, and impure. Earths of whatever kind, moistened by the dung and excrement of animals, frequently afford ni-tre in large quantities. The earths at the bottom of pigeon-houses, and those of stables and cow-houses, all afford ni-tre, on being thrown into water and boiled. In France, where very little nitre is imported, they make it from the rubbish of old mortar and plaster of buildings; and the mortar of old walls with us, if moistened with urine and exposed to the air in a proper situation that is open to the north-east, and covered over to defend it from wet, never fails to afford
and covered over to defend it from wet, never fails to afford the weight of the ingredients. There is no question but a manufactory of nitre might be established in England to as much advantage as that of France. The place where the materials are exposed, is to be carefully examined. It must be moderate as to the great points of moisture and dryness;
if there be too much moisture the nitre which is already formed will be washed away, and without some moisture the salts will hardly be ever formed. Heat and coldness, unless excessive, can be of no consequence. It is on account of the requisiteness of so certain a degree of moisture to the materials from which nitre is obtained, that the north-east winds are of so much use in the production of it. In spring and autumn, which are the seasons when this salt is principally made, these two winds are neither too moist nor too dry, especially in the night; the fourth and west winds are destructive, because they bring storms and showers. In medicine, nitre is cooling and diuretic, and good in burning fevers. The natrum or nitre of the ancients, is a genuine, native, and pure salt, extremely different from our nitre, and from all other native salts; being a fixed alkali plainly of the nature of those made by fire from vegetables, yet being capable of a regular crystallization, which those salts are not.
It is found on or very near the surface of the earth, in thin flat cakes, spongy, light, and friable; and when pure, like a pale brownish white colour. It is of an acid taste, like pot-ashes. About Smyrna and Ephesus, and through a great part of Asia Minor, this salt is extremely frequent on the surface of the earth, and also in Sindy, a province of the inner Asia, where they sweep it up and call it soap-earth, using a solution or lye of it in washing. The natrum or ni-tre of the ancients, has been by some supposed to be a nitre of substance, and by others to be the same with our nitre or salt-petre; but both these opinions are erroneous, this salt being the true natrum of the ancients, answering perfectly to its description, and having all its uses and virtues. In scripture we find that the salt called nitre would ferment with vinegar, and had an absterive quality, properties which perfectly agree with this salt but not with salt-petre, as so many different qualities ascribed to it by the ancients. Hill on Foss.

Some tumultuous cloud, Milton.

Inflamed with fire and nitre, hurried him.

Some steep their feed, and some in cauldrons boil. Dryden.

With vigorous nitre and with lees of oil.

NITROUS, adj. [nitreus, Fr. from nitre.] Impregnated with nitre; consisting of nitre.

NOB

Earth and water, mingled by the heat of the sun, gather a nitrous fatness more than either of them have severally.

Bacon's Natural History.

The northern air being more fully charged with those particles supposed nitrous, which are the aliment of fire, is sufficient to maintain the vital heat in that activity which is sufficient to move such an unwieldy bulk with due celerity. Ray.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find,
Meet stores of cold so greedily purful'd, Blackmore.
And be refresh'd with never-waiting food.

NITRY, adj. [from nitre.] Nitrous.

Winter my theme confines; whose nitry wind
Shall crust the flabby mire, and kenels bind. Gay.

NITILY, adv. [from nitry.] Lousily.

One Bell was put to death at Tyburn for moving a new rebellion; he was a man nitily needy, and therefore adventurous. Hoyward.

NITTY, adj. [from nit.] Abounding with the eggs of lice.

NITVAL, adj. [nitellus, Latin.] Abounding with snow. DiD.

NITVENS, adj. [nitens, Latin.] Snowy; resembling snow.

Cinabar becomes red by the acid exhalation of sulphur, which otherways presents a pure and nitens white. Brown.

NITZ, n. f. A dunce; a simpleton. A low word.

NO, adv. [na, Saxon.]

1. The word of refusal.

Our courteous Antony,
Whom ne'er the word of no, woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast. Shakespeare.

Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd,
In rustlet yeas and honest kersey noes. Shakespeare's Lgt.

If you will not consider these things now, the time will shortly come when you shall consider them whether you will or no. Calamy's Serm.

2. The word of denial opposite to concession or affirmation.

I think it would not fort amiss, to handle the question, whether a war for the propagation of the Christian faith, without another cause of hostility, be lawful or no, and in what cases? Bacon.

3. It sometimes confirms a foregoing negative.

My name's Macbeth: —
—The Devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. —
—No, nor more fearful. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

This hand shall combat on the crooked shore:
No, let the Grecian pow'r's oppress in fight, Unquy'd perish in their tyrant's fight. Dryden.

4. It sometimes strengthens a following negative; no not, not even.

So glorious is, or boasts so many dies. Waller.

NO, adj.

Let their be no strife between me and thee. Gen. xiii. 8.

Woman and fool are two hard things to hit,
For true no meaning puzzles more than wit. Pope.

2. It forms an adjective in these phrases, no longer, no more, no where.

When we saw that they were no where, we came to Samuel. 1 Sam. x. 14.

In vain I reach my feeble hands to join
In sweet embraces; ah! no longer thine. Dryden.

3. No one; none; not any one.

No one who doeth good to those only from whom he expects to receive good, can ever be fully satisfied of his own sincerity. Smalbridge's Serm.

TO NOBILITATE, v. a. [nobilis, Latin.] To ennoble; to make noble.

NOBILITY, n. f. [nobilitas, Latin.]

1. Antiquity of family joined with splendour.

When I took up Boccaccio unawares, I fell on the same argument of preferring virtue to nobility of blood, and titles, in the story of Sigismunda. Dryden, Fob. Pref.

Long galleries of ancestors,
Challenge, nor wonder, or esteem from me,
"Virtue alone is true nobility." Dryden.

2. Rank or dignity of several degrees, conferred by sovereigns.

Nobility in England is extended to five ranks; duke, marquis, earl, viscount, baron.

3. The persons of high rank; the persons who are exalted above the commons.

To curb the will of the nobility. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

4. Dignity; grandeur; greatness.

Though the hated Ampiaius, yet the nobility of her courage prevailed over it; and the desired he might be pardoned that youthful error; considering the reputation he had to be the best knight in the world; so as hereafter he governed himself, as one remembering his fault. Sidney, b. ii.

But ah, my muse, I would thou hadst facility
To work my goddesses for thy invention,
On me to cast those eyes where shine nobility. Sidney.

NOB

Base men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them. Shakespeare's Othello.

They thought it great their sovereignty to controul;
And nam'd their pride, nobility of soul: Dryden.

NOBLE, adj. [nobilis, Fr. nobilis, Latin.]

1. Of an ancient and splendid family.

2. Exalted to a rank above commonality.

From virtue first began,
The difference that distinguish'd man from man:
He claim'd no title from descent of blood;
But that which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

3. Great; worthy; illustrious.

Thus this man died, leaving his death for an example of a noble courage, and a memorial of virtue. 2 Mac. vi. 31.

To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds

Timorous. Milton.

A noble stroke he lifted high,

Which hung not, but with tempest fell. Milt.

Those two great things that to engross the desires and desires of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.

4. Exalted; elevated; sublime.

My share in pale Pyrene I resign,
And claim no part in all the mighty nine:
Statues, with winding ivy crown'd belong
To nobler poets, for a nobler song. Dryden.

5. Magnificent; stately; as, a noble parade.

6. Free; generous; liberal.

7. Principal; capital; as, the heart is one of the noble parts of the body.

NOBLE, n. f.

1. One of high rank.

Upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand. Ex. xxiv. 11.

How many nobles then should hold their places,
That must strike fail to spirits of vile fort! Shakespeare.

What the nobles once said in parliament, Nolumus leges Anglie mutari, is imprinted in the hearts of all the people. Bacon.

The nobles amongst the Romans took special care in their last wills, that they might have a lamp in their monuments.

Wilkin's Math. Magic.

See all our nobles begging to be slaves,

See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope, Dial. i.

It may be the disposition of young nobles, that they expect the accomplishments of a good education without the least expense of time or study. Swift's Modern Education.

The second natural division of power, is of such men who have acquired large possessions, and consequently dependencies; or descend from ancestors who have left them great inheritances, together with an hereditary authority:
these easily unite in thoughts and opinions. Thus commences a great council or senate of nobles, for the weighty affairs of the nation. Swift.

2. A coin rated at six shillings and eight-pence; the sum of six and eight-pence.

Shortly after he coined nobles, of noble, fair, and fine gold.

Camden's Remains.

Many fair promotions

Are daily given, to enoble those

That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble. Shakespeare.

Upon every writ procured for debt or damage, amounting to forty pounds or more, a noble, that is six shillings and eight-pence, is, and usually hath been paid to fine. Bacon.

NOBLE liverwort. [Hepatica.] A plant.

The characters are: the root is fibrous and perennial:
the leaf consists of three lobes on a pedicle, which arises from the root; as does the pedicle of the flower, which is naked and single: the cup of the flower is, for the most part, composed of one leaf sometimes cut into three or four deep divisions: the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruit is globular, consisting of one single cell curved.

Miller.

NOBLEMAN, n. f. [noble and man.] One who is ennobled.

If I blush,

It is to see a nobleman want manners. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

Is fill'd with int'rest worth. Dryden's Wifs of Bath.

NOBLENESS, n. f. [from noble.]

1. Greatness; worth; dignity; magnanimity.

The nobleness of life

Is to do this; when such a mutual pair,
And such a twain can do't. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

Any thing

That my ability may undergo,
And nobleness impose. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

True nobleness would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong. Shakespeare.

He that does as well in private between God and his own soul, as in public, hath given himself a good testimony that his purposes are full of honesty, nobleness, and integrity.

Taylor's Holy Living.

Great-

NOC

Greatness of mind, and nobleness, their seat Build in her loveliest. Milton's Par. Lost.
There is not only a congruity herein between the nobleness of the faculty and the object, but also the faculty is enriched and advanced by the worth of the object. Hale.
You have not only been careful of my fortune, which was the effect of your nobleness, but you have been solicitous of my reputation, which is that of your kindness. Dryden.
2. Splendour of descent; lustre of pedigree.
No'BLESS. n. f. [noblesse, French.]
1. Nobility. This word is not now used in any sense.
2. Dignity; greatness.

And one true posture, tho' belieg'd with ill. Ben. Johnson.
3. Noblemen collectively.
Let us haste to hear it,
And call the nobles to the audience. Shakep. Ham.
I know no reason we should give that advantage to the commonalty of England to be foremost in brave actions, which the nobles of France would never suffer in their peasants. Dryden's Pref. to Ann. Mirab.
No'BLV. adv. [from noble.]
1. Of ancient and splendid extraction.
Only a second laurel did adorn
His Colleague Catullus, tho' nobly born;
He sherd the pride of the triumphal bay,
But Marius won the glory of the day. Dryden.
2. Greatly; illustriously; magnanimously.
Did he not straight the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink and thralls of sleep?
Was not that nobly done? Shakep. Macbeth.
This fate he could have 'scap'd, but would not lose Honour for life; but rather nobly chose Death from their fears, than safety from his own. Denham.
3. Grandly; splendidly.
There could not have been a more magnificent design than that of Trajan's pillar. Where could an emperor's ashes have been so nobly lodged, as in the midst of his metropolis, and on the top of so exalted a monument. Addison on Italy.
No'BODY. n. f. [no and body.] No one; not any one.
This is the tune of our catch plaid by the picture of no-body.
It fell to secretary Coke's turn, for whom nobody cared, to be made the sacrifice; and he was put out of his office. Clarendon, b. ii.
If in company you offer something for a jest, and nobody seconds you on your own laughter, you may condemn their taste, and appeal to better judgments; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift's Miscel.
No'CENT. adj. [nocens, Latin.]
1. Guilty; criminal.
The earl of Devonshire being interested in the blood of York, that was rather feared than nocent; yet as one, that might be the object of others plots, remained prisoner in the Tower during the king's life. Bacon's Henry VII.
2. Hurtful; mischievous.
His head, well-stor'd with subtle wiles:
Not yet in horrid shade, or dismal den,
Nor nocent yet; but on the grassy herb,
Fearless unfeard he slept. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
The warm limbeck draws Salubrious waters from the nocent brood. Philips.
They meditate whether the virtues of the one will exalt or diminish the force of the other, or correct any of its nocent qualities. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
NoCK. n. f. [nocchia, Italian.]
1. A slit; a nick; a notch.

NOMINAL. adj. [nominalis, Latin.] Referring to names rather than to things; not real; titular.
Profound

NON

Profound in all the nominal,
And real ways beyond them all.
The nominal essence of gold is that complex idea the word gold stands for; as a body yellow, of a certain weight, malleable, fusible and fixed. But the real essence is the constitution of the insensible parts of that body on which those qualities depend. Locke.
Were these people as anxious for the doctrines essential to the church of England, as they are for the nominal distinction of adhering to its interests.
Addison.

dean and chapter, to elect the person thus elected by him.
Ayliffe's Parergon.
NOMINATIVE. [in grammar, nominativus, Fr.] The case that primarily designates the name of any thing, and is called right, in opposition to the other cases called oblique.
NON. v. a. [Latin.] Not. It is never used separately, but sometimes prefixed to words with a negative power.
Since you to non-regardance cast my faith,
And I partly know the instrument
That serves me from my true place in your favour;
Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still. Shakef.
A mere inclination to matters of duty, men reckon a willing of that thing; when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of what the law requires? South.
For an account at large of bishop Sauderson's last judgment concerning God's concurrence, or non-concurrence with the actions of men, and the positive enity of sins of commission, I refer you to his letters. Pierce.
The third sort of agreement or disagreement in our ideas, which the perception of the mind is employed about, is coexistence, or non-existence in the same subject. Locke.
It is not a non-act, which introduces a custom, a custom being a common usage.
In the imperial chamber this answer is not admitted, viz.
I do not believe it as the matter is alleged. And the reason of this non-admission is, because of its great uncertainty.
Ayliffe's Parergon.
An apparitor came to the church, and informed the parson, that he must pay the tithes to such a man; and the bishop certified the ecclesiastical court under his seal on the non-payment of them, that he refused to pay them. Ayliffe.
The non-appearance of persons to support the united sense of both houses of parliament, can never be construed as a general diffidence of being able to support the charge against the patent and patentee. Swift.
This may be accounted for by the turbulence of passions upon the various and surprising turns of good and evil fortune, in a long evening at play; the mind being wholly taken up, and the consequence of non-attention so fatal. Swift.
NONAGE. n. f. [from non and age.] Minority; time of life before legal maturity.

Be pos'd with the matured fears
Man trembles at, we straight shall find Love knows no nonage nor the mind. Craspato.
We have a mistaken apprehension of antiquity, calling that to which in truth is the world's nonage. Glasville.

NON

Those charters were not avoidable for the king's nonage; and if there could have been any such pretence, that alone would not avoid them.
After Chaucer there was a Spenser, a Harrington, a Fairfax, before Waller and Denham were in being; and our numbers were in their nonage till these last appeared. Dryd.
In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves, and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood, and the nursing spare.
NONCE. n. f. [The original of this word is uncertain; Shiner imagines it to come from exon or once; or from natz, German, need or use: Junius derives it less probably from nonance, to do for the nonce; being, according to him, to do it merely for mischief.] Purpose; intent; design. Not now in use.
I saw a wolf
Nursing two whelps; I saw her little ones
In wanton dalliance the teat to crave,
While he her neck wreath'd from them for the nonce. Spem.

Such a light and metall'd dance,
Saw you never;
And they lead men for the nonce,
That turn round like gandle-stones.
A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil should I pick their bones.
Coming ten times for the nonce,
I never yet could see it flow but once.
NONCONFORMITY. n. f. [from non and conformity.]
1. Refusal of compliance.
The will of our makers, whether discovered by reason or revelation, carries the highest authority with it; a conformity or nonconformity to it, determines their actions to be morally good or evil. Watt's Logic.
2. Refusal to join in the established religion.
Since the liturgy, rites, and ceremonies of our church, are so much struck at, and all upon a plea of conscience, it will concern us to examine the force of this plea, which our adversaries are still setting up as the grand pillar and buttress of nonconformity. South's Sermon.
The lady will plead the toleration which allows her non- conformity in this particular. Addison's Spectator.
NONCONFORMIST. n. f. [from non and conformist.] One who refuses to join in the established worship.
On his death-bed he declared himself a non-conformist, and had a fanatic preacher to be his spiritual guide. Swift.

Her mansion in this fleshly nook. Milton's Poems.
Ithuriel and Zephon,
Search thro' this garden, leave unsearch'd no nook. Milt.
A third form'd within the ground
A various mold; and from the boiling cells,
By strange conveyance, fill'd each hollow nook. Milton.
NOON. n. f. [from non, Saxon; navon, Welsh; none, Erse; supposed to be derived from nona, Latin, the ninth hour, at which their cane or chief meal was eaten; whence the other nations called the time of their dinner or chief meal, though earlier in the day, by the same name.]
1. The middle hour of the day; twelve; the time when the sun is in the meridian.
Fetch forth the flocks, there shall he sit 'till noon.—
'Till noon! 'till night, my lord. Shakef. K. Lear.
The day already half his race had run,
And summon'd him to due repast at noon. Dryden.
If I turn my eyes at noon towards the sun, I cannot avoid the ideas which the light or sun produces in me. Locke.
2. It is taken for midnight.
Full before him at the noon of night,
He saw a quire of ladies. Dryden.

NOR. adv. [The or.]
1. A particle marking the second or subsequent branch of a negative proposition; correlative to neither or not.
Neither love, nor fear thee. Shakefpeare.
2. Two negatives are sometimes joined, but ill.
Mine eyes,
Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not;
Nor, I am sure there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt. Shakefpeare's As you like it.
3. Neither is sometimes included in nor, but not elegantly.
Fow'r's, disgrace, nor death could ought divert Thy glorious tongue thus to reveal thy heart. Daniel.
Sinois nor Xanthus shall be wanting there;
A new Achilles shall in arms appear. Dryden.
4. Nor is sometimes used in the first branch for neither.
Idle nymphs, I pray thee, be Modest, and not follow me,
I nor love myself, nor thee, Ben. Jonson.

NOS

Nor did they not perceive their evil plight,
Or the fierce pains not feel Milton.
But how perplex, alas! is human fate?
I whom nor avarice, nor pleasures move;
Yet must myself be made a slave to love. Walsh.
NORTH. n. f. [norð, Saxon.] The point opposite to the sun in the meridian.
More unconstant than the wind; who woos
Ev'n now the frozen bosom of the north;
And being anger'd puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew dropping south. Shakesp.
The tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from blowing. Shakesp. Cymb.
Pierce Boreas issues forth
T' invade th' frozen waggon of the north. Dryd.

Rears up the Baltick to a foaming fury. Watts.
NOSE. n. f. [noze, noza, Saxon.]
1. The prominence on the face, which is the organ of scent and the emunctory of the brain.
Down with the nose,
Take the bridge quite away
Of him that, his particular to forefend, Smells from the gen'ral weal. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.
Nose of Turks and Tartars lips. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Our decrees,
Dead to infirmity, to themselves are dead;
And liberty plucks justice by the nose. Sha. M. of Ven.
There can be no reason given why a visage somewhat longer, or a nose flatter, could not have consisted with such a soul. Locke.
Poetry takes me up so entirely, that I scarce see what pallies under my nose. Pope's Letters.
2. The end of any thing.
The lungs are as bellows, the aspera arteria is the nose of the bellows, or as a channel in the sound board of an organ.
Holder's Elements of Speech.
3. Scent; fragrance.
We are not offended with a dog for a better nose than his master. Collier on Envy.
4. To lead by the nose. To drag by force: as, a bear by his ring. To lead blindly.
Tho' authority be a stubborn bear,
Yet he is oft led by the nose with gold. Sha. W. Tale.

NOT

In suits which a man doth not understand, it is good to refer them to some friend, but let him chuse well his referendary, else he may be led by the nose. Bacon.
That some occult design doth lie
In bloody cynarctomachy,
Is plain enough to him that knows,
How faints lead brothers by the nose. Hamlet, p. 1.
This is the method of all popular shams, when the impudence are to be led by the noses into a fool's paradise. L'Estr.
5. To thrust and's nose into the affairs of others. To be meddling with other people's matters; to be a busy body.

NOSTRIL. n. f. [nose and synl, a hole, Saxon.] The cavity in the nose.
Turn then my feeblest reputation to
A favour that may strike the dullest nostril. Shakespeare.
Stinks which the nostrils straight abhor, are not the most pernicious.
He form'd thee, Adam, and in thy nostrils breath'd
The breath of life. Milton's P. Lost, b. vii.
The secondary action subsisteth not alone, but in concomitancy with the other; so the nostrils are useful both for respiration and smelling, but the principal use is smelling.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
These ripe fruits recreate the nostrils with their aromatick scent. More's Divine Dialogue.
NOSTRUM. n. f. [Latin.] A medicine not yet made publick, but remaining in some single hand.

upon his monument, His jactat auctor hujus argumenti; for no body ever used it before. Stillington.
What drop or nostrum can this plague remove? Pope.
NOT. adv. [ne auzt, Saxon; niet, Dutch.]
1. The particle of negation, or refusal.
If thou be the world's great parent,
How falls it then that with thy furious fervour
Thou dost afflict as well the not deserver,
As him that doth thy lovely hefts despise?
His countenance likes me not. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
The man held his peace, to wit whether the Lord had made his journey prosperous or not. Gen. xxiv. 21.
Let each man do as to his fancy seems;
I wait, not I, till you have better dreams.
This objection hinders not but that the heroic action en-terprised for the Christian cause, and executed happily, may be as well executed now as it was of old. Dryden.
Grammar being to teach men not to speak, but to speak correctly: where rhetoric is not necessary, grammar may be spared. Locke on Education.
This day, be bread and peace my lot;
All else beneath the sun
Thou know'st if best bestow'd or not.
And let thy will be done. Pope's Universal Prayer.
2. It denotes cessation or extinction. No more.
Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not. Joh. vii. 8.
NOTABLE. adj. [notabile, Fr. notabilis, Latin.] Remarkable; memorable; observable.
The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears; which, it seems, all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney, b. iii.

NOT

The fame is notified in the notable places of the dioceses.
Whitgift.
In the parliament at Kilkenny, many notable laws were enacted, which shew, for the law doth best discover enormities, how much the English colonies were corrupted.
Davies on Ireland.
Two young men appeared notable in strength, excellent in beauty, and comely in apparel. Mac. iii. 26.
They bore two or three charges from the horse with notable courage, and without being broken. Clarendon.
Both armies lay still without any notable action, for the space of ten days. Clarendon, b. viii.
Varro's aviary is still so famous, that it is reckoned for one of those notables which men of foreign nations record.
Addison.
Cæsar, whose great sagacity and conduct put his success as much out of the power of chance as human reason could well do, yet upon occasion of a notable experiment, that had like to have lost him his whole army at Dyrrachium, tells us the power of it in his commentaries. Scotch's Sermon.
It is impossible but a man must have first pass'd this notable stage, and got his conscience thoroughly debauched and hardened, before he can arrive to the height of sin. South.
2. Careful; bustling; in contempt and irony.
This absolute monarch was as notable a guardian of the fortunes, as of the lives of his subjects. When any man grew rich, to keep him from being dangerous to the state, he sent for all his goods. Addison's Freeholder, No. 10.
NOTABLENESS. n. f. [from notable.] Appearance of business; importance. In contempt.
NOTABLY. adv. [from notable.]
1. Memorably; remarkably.
This we see notably proved, in that the oft polling of hedges conduces much to their lasting. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. With consequence; with shew of importance; ironically.
Mention the king of Spain or Poland, and he talks very notably; but if you go out of the gazette, you drop him.
Addison's Spectator, No. 105.
NOTARIAL. adj. [from notary.] Taken by a notary.
It may be called an authentic writing, though not a publick instrument, through want of a notarial evidence. Abpiff.
NOTARY. n. f. [notaire, Fr. from notarius, Latin.] An officer whose business it is to take notes of any thing which may concern the publick.
There is a declaration made to have that very book, and no other set abroad, wherein their present authorized notaries do write those things fully and only, which being written and there read, are by their own open testimony acknowledged to be their own. Hooker.
Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your bond. Shakespeare, M. of Venice.
One of those with him, being a notary, made an entry of this act. Bacon's New Atlantis.
So I but your recorder am in this,
A ministerial notary; for 'tis
Not I, but you and fame that make this verse. Donne.
They have in each province, intendants and notaries. Temp.
NOTATION. n. f. [notatio, Latin.]
1. The act or practice of recording any thing by marks: as,
by figures or letters.
Notation teaches how to describe any number by certain notes and characters, and to declare the value thereof being so described, and that is by degrees and periods. Cocker.
2. Meaning; signification.
A foundation being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to a building. Hammond.
Confidence, according to the very notation of the word, imports a double knowledge; one of a divine law, and the other of a man's own action; and so is properly the application of a general law, to a particular instance of practice.
South's Sermons.
NOTCH. n. f. [nocchia, Italian.] A nick; a hollow cut in any thing.
The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces in the margin, of a pyramidid figure apically set, and with transverse notches. Grew's Museum.
From his rug the skew'r he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes:
There take my tally of ten thousand pound.
He shew'd a comma ne'er could claim
A place in any British name;
Yet making here a perfect botch,
Thrusts your poor vowel from his notch. Swift.
To NOTCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in small hollows.
He was too hard for him directly: before Coriol, he footch him and notch him like a carbonado. Shakespeare.
The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces, cancelled and transversely notched. Grew's Museum.

NOT

From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him who natches sticks at Westminster. Pope.
NOTCHWEE'D. n. f. [natch and weed.] An herb called orach.
NOTE. [for ne note.] May not.
Ne let him then admire,
But yield his sense to be too blunt and bafe,
That note without an hound fine footing trace. Fairy Q.
NOTE. n. f. [nota, Lat. notte, Fr.]
1. Mark; token.
Whoever appertain to the visible body of the church, they have also the notes of external profession whereby the world knoweth what they are. Hester, b. iii.
2. Notice; heed.
Give order to my servants that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence. Shakespeare.
I will bestow some precepts on this virgin,
Worthy the note. Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.
3. Reputation; consequence.
Divers men of note have been brought over into England.
Andronicus and Junia are of note among the apostles. Rom. xvi. 7.
As for metals, authors of good note assure us, that even they have been observed to grow. Boyle.
4. Reproach; stigma.
The more to aggravate the note,
With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat. Shakespeare.
5. Account; information; intelligence.
She that from Naples
Can have no note; unless the sun were post. Shakespeare, Tempest.
The man 'th' moon's too slow.
In suits of favour, the first coming ought to take little place; so far forth consideration may be had of his trust, that if intelligence of the matter could not otherwise have been had but by him, advantage be not taken of the note, but the party left to his other means, and in some sort re-compens'd for his discovery. Bacon, Essay 49.
6. Tune; voice.
These are the notes wherewith are drawn from the hearts of the multitude to many fighs; with these tunes their minds are expensated against the lawful guides and governors of their souls. Hooker, b. iv.
The wakeful bird tunes her nocturnal note. Milton.
I now must change those notes to tragick. Milton.
You that can tune your sounding strings so well,
Of ladies beauties and of love to tell;
Once change your note, and let your lute report
The justest grief that ever touch'd the court.
One common note on either lyre did strike,
And knaves and fools we both abhor'd alike. Dryden.
7. Single found in music.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony!
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony
Thro' all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.
8. State of being observed.
Small matters come with great commendation, because they are continually in use and in note; whereas the occasion of any great virtue cometh but on festivals. Bacon.
9. Short hint; small paper.
He will'd me
In heedfulst reservation to bestow them,
As notes whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they were in note. Shakespeare.
In the body's prison so the lies,
As through the body's windows the must look,
Her divers pow'rs of sense to exercise,
By gathering notes out of the world's great book. Davies.
10. Abbreviation; symbol.
Contract it into a narrow compass by short notes and abbreviations. Baker on Learning.
11. A small letter.
A hollow cane within her hand she brought,
But in the concave had inclos'd a note. Dryden.
12. Written paper.
I cannot get over the prejudice of taking some little offence at the clergy, for perpetually reading their sermons; perhaps my frequent hearing of foreigners, who never make use of notes, may have added to my disgust. Swift.
13. A paper given in confession of a debt.
His note will go farther than my bond. John Bull.
14. Explanatory annotation.
The best writers have been perplexed with notes, and obscured with illustrations. Pelton on the Classics.
NOTEBOOK. n. f. [note and book.] A book in which notes and memorandums are set down.
Cassius all his faults observ'd;
Set in a notebook, learn'd, and conn'd by rote,
To cast into my teeth. Shakespeare, J. Cæsar.
To NOTE. v. a. [note, Latin; noter, French.]

NOT

- To observe; to remark; to heed; to attend; to take notice of.
The fool hath much pined away.
No more of that, I have noted it well. Shaksp. K. Lear.
If much you note him,
You shall offend him. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I began to note
The stormy Hyades, the rainy goat. Addis. Ovid.
Wandering from clime to clime, observant stray'd,
Their manners noted, and their states survey'd. Pope.
- To deliver; to set down.
Saint Augustin speaking of devout men, noteth how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they gave unto the lessons and chapters read. Hooker, b. v.
Note it in a book, that it may be for ever and ever. Jf. xxx. 8.
- To charge with a crime.
Sine velle Dianam, agrees better with Livia, who had the fame of chastity, than with either of the Julia's, who were both noted of incontinency. Dryden.
- [In mulick.] To set down the notes of a tune.
NOTED, part. adj. [from note.] Remarkable; eminent; celebrated.
A noted chymist procured a privilege, that none but he should vend a spirit. Boyle.
Justinian's laws, if we may believe a noted author, have not the force of laws in France or Holland. Baker.
- NOTICE. n. f. [from note.] He who takes notice.
NOTHING. n. f. [no and thing; nothing, Scotch.]
 - Negation of being; nonentity; universal negation; opposed to something.
It is most certain, that there never could be nothing. For, if there could have been an instant, wherein there was no-thing, then either nothing made something, or something made itself; and so was, and acted, before it was. But if there never could be nothing; then there is, and was, a being of necessity, without any beginning. Crew's Cof.
We do not create the world from nothing and by nothing; we assert an eternal God to have been the efficient cause of it. Bentley's Serm.
This nothing is taken either in a vulgar or philosophical sense; so we say there is nothing in the cup in a vulgar sense, when we mean there is no liquor in it; but we cannot say there is nothing in the cup, in a strict philosophical sense, while there is air in it. Watts's Logic.
 - Nonexistence.
Mighty flates characterless are grates
To dusty nothing. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.
- Not any thing; no particular thing.
There shall nothing die. Ex. ix. 4.

But such a face as promis'd him nothing. Dryden.
Philosophy wholly speculative, is barren and produces nothing but vain ideas. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Nothing at all was done, while any thing remained undone. Addison on the War.
- No other thing.
Nothing but a steady resolution brought to practice; God's grace used, his commandments obeyed, and his pardon begged; nothing but this will intitle you to God's acceptance. Wake's Prep. for Death.
Words are made to declare something; where they are, by those who pretend to instruct, otherwise used, they conceal indeed something; but that which they conceal, is nothing but the ignorance, error, or sophistry of the talker, for there is, in truth, nothing else under them. Locke.
- No quantity or degree.
The report which the troops of horie make, would add nothing of courage to their fellows. Clarendon.
- No importance; no use; no value.
The outward shew of churches, draws the rude people to the reverencing and frequenting thereof, whatever some of our late too nice fools say, there is nothing in the seemly form of the church.
Behold, ye are of nothing, and your work of naught. Isaiah xli. 24.
- No possession or fortune.
A most homely shepherd; a man that from very nothing is grown into an unspeakable estate. Shak. W. Tale.
- No difficulty; no trouble.
We are industrious to preserve our bodies from slavery, but we make nothing of suffering our souls to be slaves to our lusts. Ray on the Creation.
- A thing of no proportion.
The charge of making the ground, and otherwise is great, but nothing to the profit. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- Trifle; something of no consideration or importance.
I had rather have one scratch my head i'th' sun,
When the alarm were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings moulder'd. Shakespeare's Cor.
My dear nothings, take your leave,
No longer must you me deceive,

NOT

- 'Tis nothing, says the fool, but says the friend,
This nothing, Sir, will bring you to your end.
Do I not see your droopy-belly swell? Dryden.
That period includes more than a hundred sentences that might be writ to express multiplication of nothings, and all the fatiguing perpetual business of having no business to do. Pope's Letters.
- Nothing has a kind of adverbial signification. In no degree; not at all.
Who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worth?
Aurora nothing dismayed with the greatness of the Turk's fleet, still kept on his course. Kneller's Hist. of the Turk.
But Adam with such counsel nothing sway'd. Milton.
 - NOTHINGNESS. n. f. [from nothing.]
 - Nihilty; nonexistence.
His art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness. Dante.
 - Nothing; thing of no value.
I a nothingness in deed and name,
Did scorn to hurt his forfeit carcass. Hadrian, p. i.
 - NOTICE. n. f. [notice, French; notitia, Latin.]
 - Remark; heed; observation; regard.
The thing to be regarded in taking notice of a child's miscarriage is, what root it springs from. Locke.
This is done with little notice: very quick the actions of the mind are performed. Locke.
How ready is envy to mingle with the notices which we take of other persons! Watts.
 - Information; intelligence given or received.
I have given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall and his dutches will be here. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
 - NOTIFICATIONS. n. f. [notification, F. from notify.] Act of making known; representation by marks or symbols.
Four or five torches elevated or depressed out of their order, either in breadth or longways, may, by agreement, give great variety of notifications. Holder's Elements of Speech.
 - NOTIFY. v. a. [notify, Fr. notifico, Latin.] To declare; to make known; to publish.
There are other kind of laws, which notify the will of God. Hooker, b. ii. f. 2.
The fame is notified in the notablest places of the whole diocess. Whitgift.
Good and evil operate upon the mind of man, by those respective appellations by which they are notified and conveyed to the mind. Saunders's Serm.
- NOTION. n. f. [notion, Fr. notio, Latin.]
 - Thought; representation of any thing formed by the mind; idea; image; conception.
Many actions are punished by law, that are acts of ingratitude; but this is merely accidental to them, as they are such acts; for if they were punished properly under that notion, and upon that account, the punishment would equally reach all actions of the same kind. South's Serm.
The fiction of some beings which are not in nature; second notions, as the logicians call them, has been founded on the conjunction of two natures, which have a real separate being. Dryden's State of Innocence.
What hath been generally agreed on, I content myself to assume under the notion of principles, in order to what I have farther to write. Newt. Opt.
There is nothing made a more common subject of discourse than nature and it's laws; and yet few agree in their notions about these words. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
That notion of hunger, cold, sound, colour, thought, wish, or fear, which is in the mind, is called the idea of hunger, cold, sound, wish, &c. Watts's Logic.
 - Sentiment; opinion.
God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts and notions vain. Milt.

 - NOUGHT. n. f. [no and ought, not any thing, Saxon; as therefore we write ought not ought for any thing, we should, according to analogy, write naught not nought, for nothing; but a custom has irreverently prevailed of using naught for bad, and nought for nothing.

1. Not any thing; nothing.
In young Rinaldo fierce desires he spy'd,
And noble heart, of rest impatient,
To wealth or sovereign power he nought apply'd. Fairfax.
Who cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold, but says he sees it not?
Bad is the world, and it will come to nought,
When such ill dealings must be seen in thought. Shakesf.
Such smiling rogues as these foth ev'ry passion;
Renegs, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their matters,
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shakesf.
Ye are of nothing, and your work of nought. Jf. xli. 24.

NULL. n. f. Something of no power, or no meaning. Marks in ciphered writing which stand for nothing, and are inserted only to puzzle, are called nulls.

If part of the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bacon's War with Spain.

NULLITY. n. f. [from nullus, Latin.] The state of being nowhere.

To NULLIFY. v. a. [from nullus, Latin.] To annul; to make void.

NULLITY. n. f. [nullité, French.]

1. Want of force or efficacy.

It can be no part of my business to overthrow this distinction, and to shew the nullity of it; which has been solidly done by most of our polemick writers. Saath's Sermons.

The jurisdiction is opened by the party, in default of justice from the ordinary, as by appeals or nullities. Ayliffe.

2. Want of existence.

A hard body struck against another hard body, will yield an exterior found, in so much as if the percussion be over soft, it may induce a nullity of found; but never an interior found. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

NUMB. adj. [benumen, benumbed, Saxon.]

1. Torpid; deprived in a great measure of the power of motion and sensation; chill; motionless.

Like a stony statue, cold and numb. Shakespeare.

Leaning long upon any part maketh it numb and asleep; for that the compression of the part suffereth not the spirits to have free access; and therefore when we come out of it, we feel a stinging or pricking, which is the re-entrance of the spirits. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Producing chillness; benumbing.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me
Ev'n in his garments, and did give himself
All thin and naked to the numb cold night. Shakesp.

To NUMB. v. a. To make torpid; to make dull of motion or sensation; to deaden; to stupify.

Bedlam beggars, with roaring voices
Strike in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms,
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary;
And with this horrible object, from low farms, Inforce their charity. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

She can unlock
The clasping charm, and thaw the numbing spell. Milt.

Plough naked, fawn, and naked sow the land,
For lazy winter numbs the lab'ring hand. Dryden.

Nought shall avail
The pleasing song, or well repeated tale,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbraided the ear. Prior.

The fool numbs me like the torpor. Bolingb. to Swift.

NUMBEDNESS. n. f. [from numbed.] Torpor; interruption of sensation.

If the nerve be quite divided, the pain is little, only a kind of stupor or numbness. Wise's Surgery.

To NUMBER. v. a. [numbrer, French; numere, Latin.]

The gold, the vest, the tripods number'd o'er,
All these he found. Pope's Odyssey, b. 13.

2. To reckon as one of the same kind.

He was numbered with the transgressors, and bare the sin of many. Is. liii. 12.

NUMBER. n. f. [nombre, French; numerus, Latin.]

1. The species of quantity by which it is computed how many.

Hye thee, from this slaughter-house,
Left thou increase the number of the dead. Sha. Rich. III.

The silver, the gold, and the vessels, were weighed by number and by weight. Ezek. viii. 24.

Thou shalt take a few in number, and bind them in thy skirts. Ezek. v. 3.

There is but one gate for strangers to enter at, that it may be known what numbers of them are in the town. Addison.

2. Any particular aggregate of units, as even or odd.

This is the third time; I hope good luck lies in odd numbers: they say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Shakespeare. M. W. of Wind.

3. Many; more than one.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

Water lily hath a root in the ground; and so have a number of other herbs that grow in ponds.

Ladies are always of great use to the party they espouse, and never fail to win over numbers. Addison.

4. Multitude that may be counted.

Of him came nations and tribes out of number. 2 Esd. iii. 7.

Loud as from numbers without number. Milton.

5. Comparative multitude.

Number itself importeth not much in armies, where the people are of weak courage: for, as Virgil says, it never troubles a wolf how many the sheep be. Bacon.

NUM

6. Aggregated multitude.

If you will, some few of you shall see the place; and then you may send for your sick, and the rest of your number, which ye will bring on land. Bacon's N. Atlantic.

7. Harmony; proportions calculated by number.

They, as they move
Their starry dance in numbers that compute Days, months, and years, tow'rd his all-cheering lamp, Turn swift. Milton.

8. Verses; poetry.

Should the muses bid my numbers roll
Strong as their charms. Pope.

9. [In grammar.]

In the noun is the variation or change of termination to signify a number more than one. When men first invented names, their application was to single things; but soon finding it necessary to speak of several things of the same kind together, they found it likewise necessary to vary or alter the noun.

How many numbers is in nouns? —
— Two. Shakespeare. Merry W. of Windsor.

NUMBERER. n. f. [from number.] He who numbers.

NUMBERLESS. adj. [from number.] Innumerable; more than can be reckoned.

I forgive all;
There cannot be those numberless offences
'Gainst me. Shakespeare.

About his chariot numberless were pour'd Cherub and seraph. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Defers to great
Though numberless, I never shall forget. Denham.

The soul conveys with numberless beings of her own creation. Addison's Spectator, No. 488.

He travels then a hundred leagues,
And suffers numberless fatigues. Swift's Miscell.

NUMBERS. n. f. [numbrer, Fr.] The entrails of a deer. Bacon.

NUMBNESS. n. f. [from numb.] Torpor; interruption of action or sensation; deadness; stupefaction.

Stir, nay, come away;
Bequeath to death your numbness; for from him
Dear life redeems you. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

Till length of years
And sedentary numbness craze my limbs
To a contemptible old age obscure. Milt. Agn.

Her corps of sense, and th' air her soul receives. Denham.

Silence is worse than the fiercest and loudest accusations; since it may proceed from a kind of numbness or stupidity of confidence, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not so much as dare to complain, or make a stir. Saath's Sermons.

NUMERABLE. adj. [numeralis, Latin.] Capable to be numbered.

NUMERAL. adj. [numeral, Fr. from numerus, Latin.] Relating to number; consisting of number.

Some who cannot retain the several combinations of numbers in their distinct orders, and the dependance of so long a train of numeral progressions, are not able all their life time regularly to go over any moderate series of numbers. Lect.

NUMERALLY. adv. [from numeral.] According to number.

The blasts and undulatory breaths thereof, maintain no certainty in their course; nor are they numerally fear'd by navigators. Bacon's Vulgar Errors, b. vii.

1. Containing many; consisting of many; not few; many.

Queen Elizabeth was not so much observed for having a numerous, as a wise council. Bacon.

2. Harmonious; consisting of parts rightly numbered; melodious; musical.

Thy heart, no ruder than the rugged stone,
I might, like Orpheus, with my numerous moan Melt to compassion. Waller.

His verses are so numerous, so various, and so harmonious, that only Virgil, whom he professedly imitated, has surpassed him. Dryden.

NUMEROUSNESS. n. f. [from numerosus.]

1. The quality of being numerous.

2. Harmony; musicalness.

That which will distinguish his style is, the numerousness of his verse. There is nothing so delicately turned in all the Roman language. Dryden.

NUMMARY. adj. [from nummus, Latin.] Relating to money.

The money drachma in process of time decreas'd; but all the while the ponderal drachma continued the same, just as our ponderal libra remains as it was, though the nummary hath much decreas'd. Abramot on Coins.

NUMMULAR. adj. [nummularius, Latin.] Relating to money.

NUMSKULL. n. f. [Probably from numb, dull, torpid, infensible, and skull.]

1. A dullard; a dunce; a dolt; a blockhead.

Or toes and fingers, in this case,

NUNCUPATORY. adj. [from nuncupatus, Latin.]

NUNCIARY. adj. [from nuncio, Latin.]

NUNNERY. n. f. [from nun.] A house of nuns; of women under a vow of chastity, dedicated to the severer duties of religion.

I put your sister into a nunnery, with a strict command not to see you, for fear you should have wrought upon her to have taken the habit. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

NUPTIAL. adj. [nuptial, French; nuptialis, Latin.] Pertaining to marriage; constituting marriage; used or done in marriage.

Confirm that amity

NUR

With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant Bona to England's king. Shakespeare.

Because propagation of families proceedeth from the nuptial copulation, I desired to know of him what laws and customs they had concerning marriage. Bacon.

Then all in heat
They light the nuptial torch. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Whoever will partake of God's secrets, must first pare off whatsoever is amiss, and not eat of this sacrifice with a defiled head, nor come to this feast without a nuptial garment. Taylor.

Fir'd with her love, and with ambition led,
The neighb'ring princes court her nuptial bed. Dryden.

Let our eternal peace be seal'd by this,
With the first ardour of a nuptial kiss. Dryd. Aurengzebe.

NUPTIALS. n. f. like the Latin without singular. [nuptiae, Lat.] Marriage.

This is the triumph of the nuptial day,
My better nuptials, which in spite of fate,
For ever join me to my dear Moras. Dryd. Aurengz.

2. It is in Shakespeare singular, but contrarily to use.

Lift up your countenance, as 'twere the day
Of celebration of that nuptial, which We two have sworn shall come. Shakespeare. W. Tale.

NURSE. n. f. [nourrice, French.]

Nurs'd secretly with milk the thriving God. Addison.

4. To tend the sick.

5. To pamper; to foment; to encourage; to soften; to cherish.

And what is strength, but an effect of youth, which if time nurse, how can it ever cease? Davies.

By what fate has vice so thriven amongst us, and by what hands been nurs'd up into so uncontroled a dominion? Locke on Education.

Our monarchs were acknowledged here,
That they their churches nursing fathers were. Denham.

NURSER. n. f. [from nurse.]

1. One that nurses.

See where he lies, inhered in the arms
Of the most bloody nurse of his harms. Shakespeare.

2. A promoter; a fomentor.

NURSERY. n. f. [from nurse.]

1. The act or office of nursing.

I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nursery. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

2. That which is the object of a nurse's care.

She went forth among her fruits and flow'rs,
To visit how they prosper'd, bud and bloom
For nursery: they at her coming sprung,
And touch'd by her fair tendance gladder grew. Milton.

3. A plantation of young trees to be transplanted to other ground.

Your nursery of stocks ought to be in a more barren ground than the ground is whereunto you remove them. Bacon.

NUT

My paper is a kind of nursery for authors, and some who have made a good figure here, will hereafter flourish under their own names. Addison's Guard.

4. Place where young children are nursed and brought up. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

You see before you the spectacle of a Plantagenet, who hath been carried from the nursery to the sanctuary, from the sanctuary to the direful prison, from the prison to the hand of the cruel tormentor, and from that hand to the wide wilderness; for so the world hath been to me. Bacon.

Forthwith the devil did appear,
Not in the shape in which he plies
At mis's elbow when she lies;
Or stands before the nursery doors,
To take the naughty boy that roars. Prior.

They have public nurseries, where all parents are obliged to send their infants to be educated. Gull Trav.

5. The place or state where any thing is fostered or brought up, from a nursery of children, or whence any thing is to be removed from a nursery of trees.

This keeping of cows is of itself a very idle life, and a fit nursery for a thief. Spenser on Ireland.

To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy. Shakespeare.

A luxurious court is the nursery of diseases; it breeds them, it encourages, nourishes, and entertains them. L'Estrange.

A nursery erects its head,
Where queens are form'd and future heroes bred;
Where unblest actors learn to laugh and cry. Dryden.

NURSING. n. f. [from nurse.] One nursed up; a fondling.

Then was the held in sovereign dignity,
And made the nursing of nobility. Spenser.

I was his nursing once, and choice delight
His destin'd from the womb. Mil. Agonistes.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood, and the nursing spare. Dryden.

NURTURE. n. f. [contracted from nurture, French.]

1. Food; diet.

For this did th' angel twice descend?
Ordain'd thy nurture holy, as of a plant
Select and sacred. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Education; institution. Little used.

She should take order for bringing up of wards in good nurture, not suffer them to come into bad hands. Spenser.

The thorny point
Of bare distress, hath ta'en from me the shew
Of smooth civility; yet am I inland bred,
And know some nurture. Shakespeare. As you like it.

TO NURTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To educate; to train; to bring up.

Thou broughtest it up with thy righteousness, and nurturest it in thy law, and reformedst it with thy judgment. 2. Esdr. viii. 12.

He was nurtured where he had been born in his first rudiments, till the years of ten.

When an insolent despiser of discipline, nurtured into impudence, shall appear before a church governour, severity and resolution are that governour's virtues. South.

2. To nurture up; to bring by care and food to maturity.

They suppose mother earth to be a great animal, and to have nurtured up her young offspring with a conscious tenderness. Bentley's Serm.

TO NURTURE. v. a. To fondle; to cherish. Corrupted from nurse. Ainsl.

NUT. n. f. [hnut, Saxon; noot, Dutch; noix, Fr.]

1. The fruit of certain trees; it consists of a kernel covered by a hard shell. If the shell and kernel are in the center of a pulpy fruit, they then make not a nut but a stone.

One chance'd to find a nut
In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel-root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel;
Which out the kernel gotten had;
When quoth this Fay, dear queen be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll let you safe from peril. Drayt. Nymphid.

Nuts are hard of digestion, yet possess some good medicinal qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A small body with teeth, which correspond with the teeth of wheels.

The force of this faculty may be more conveniently used by the multiplication of several wheels, together with nuts belonging unto each, that are used for the roasting of meat. Wilkin's Mathem. Magick.

Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth of the wheels and nuts be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled, will hardly move. Roy on the Creation.

NUTTEROWN. adj. [nut and brown.] Brown like a nut kept long. Young and old come forth to play,

NUT

Till the live-long daylight fail,
Then to the spicy nutbrown ale. Milton's Poems.

When this nutbrown sword was out,
With stomach huge he laid about. Hudibras, p. 1.

Two milk-white kids run frisking by her side,
For which the nutbrown lass, Erithacis,
Full often offer'd many a favoury kiss. Dryden.

King Hardicute, midst Danes and Saxons stout, Carous'd in nutbrown ale, and din'd on grout. King.

NUTCRACKERS. n. f. [nut and crack.] An instrument used to enclose nuts and break them by pressure.

He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a pair of nutcrackers. Addison's Spectator.

NUTGALL. n. f. [nut and gall.] Excrement of an oak. In vegetable excretions, maggots terminate in flies of constant shapes, as in the nutgalls of the outlandish oak. Brown.

NUTTHATCH. n. f. A bird. Ainsl.

NUTJOBBER. n. f. A bird. Ainsl.

NUTTHOOK. n. f. [nut and hook.] A stick with a hook at the end to pull down boughs that the nuts may be gathered.

Nutbook, Nutbook, you lie. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

NUTMEG. n. f. [nut and mugit, French.]

The nutmeg is a kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and separated from that and from its investient coat, the mace before it is sent over to us; except that the whole fruit is sometimes sent over in preserve, by way of sweet-meat or as a curiosity. The nutmeg is of a roundish or oval figure, of a compact or firm texture, and its surface furrowed: it is of an extremely agreeable smell and an aromatick taste. There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male which is long and cylindrical, but it has less of the fine aromatick flavour than the female, which is of the shape of an olive. The Dutch import the nutmegs and mace from the East-Indies, and supply all Europe with them. The tree which produces them is not unlike our pear-tree in its manner of growth: its leaves, whether green or dried, have, when bruised, a very fragrant smell; and the trunk or branches, cut or broken off, yield a red liquor like blood. This tree is carefully cultivated. But that which produces the male nutmeg grows wild in the mountainous parts of the Moluccas. Nutmeg is much used in our foods, and is of excellent virtues as a medicine. Hill.

The second a dry and sterculous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth a kernel included in the shell, which lieth under the mace, is the same we call nutmeg. Brown's V. L.

I to my pleasant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant scent. Sandys.

NUTSHELL. n. f. [nut and shell.] The hard substance that encloses the kernel of the nut.

I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A fox had me by the back, and a thousand pound to a nutshell, I had never got off again. L'Estrange.

It seems as easy to me, to have the idea of space empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nutshell without a kernel. Locke.

NUTTREE. n. f. [nut and tree.] A tree that bears nuts; hazel.

Of trees you shall have the nuttree and the oak. Peacham.

Like beating nuttrees, makes a larger crop. Dryden.

NUTRICATION. n. f. [nutricatio, Lat.] Manner of feeding or being fed.

Besides the teeth, the tongue of this animal is a second argument to overthrow this airy nutrition. Brown.

NUTRIMENT. n. f. [nutrimentum, Latin.] That which feeds or nourishes; food; aliment.

This fave
Has my lord's meat in him,
Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment? Shakespeare.

The stomach returns what it has received, in strength and nutriment, diffused into all the parts of the body. South.

Does not the body thrive and grow,
By food of twenty years ago?
And is not virtue in mankind,
The nutriment that feeds the mind? Swift's Miscell.

NUTRIMENTAL. adj. [from nutriment.] Having the qualities of food; alimental.

By virtue of this oil vegetables are nutrimental, for this oil is extracted by animal digestion as an emulsion. Ach.

NUTRITION. n. f. [from nutritio, nutris, Lat. nutrition, Fr.] The act or quality of nourishing, supporting strength, or encreasing growth.

New parts are added to our substance to supply our continual decayings; nor can we give a certain account how the aliment is so prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is so regularly distributed. Glauc. Steph. c. iii.

The obstruction of the glands of the mesentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in those glands is a necessary constituent of the aliment before it mixeth with the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot,
To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot. Pope.

NUTRITIOUS.

NUZ

NUTRITIOUS. adj. [from nutris, Latin.] Having the quality of nourishing.

O may't thou often see Thy furrows whiten'd by the woolly rain Nutritious! secret nitre lurks within. Philips.

The heat equal to incubation is only nutritious; and the nutritious juice itself resembles the white of an egg in all its qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.

NUTRITIVE. adj. [from nutris, Latin.] Nourishing; nutritive; alimental.

NUTRITURE. n. f. [from nutris, Latin.] The power of nourishing.

Never make a meal of flesh alone, have some other meat with it of less nutriture. Harvey on Consump.

TO NUZZLE. v. a. [This word, in its original signification, seems corrupted from nurse; but when its original meaning was forgotten, writers supposed it to come from nozzle or nose, and in that sense used it.]

1. To nurse; to foster.

Old men long nuzzled in corruption, scorning them that would seek reformation. Sidney.

NYS

2. To go with the nose down like a hog.

He charged through an army of lawyers, sometimes with sword in hand, at other times nuzzling like an eel in the mud. Arbutnot's John Bull.

Sir Roger shook his ears, and nuzzled along, well satisfied that he was doing a charitable work. Arch. J. Bull.

The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to the third, who nuzzles close behind. Pope.

NYMPH. n. f. [νύμφη; nymphas, Lat.]

1. A goddess of the woods, meadows, or waters.

And as the moisture which the thirsty earth
Sucks from the sea, to fill her empty veins,
From out her womb at last doth take a birth,
And runs a nymph along the grassy plains. Dante.

2. A lady. In poetry.

This resolve no mortal dame,
None but those eyes cou'd have o'erthrown;
The nymph I dare not, need not name. Waller.

NYS. [A corruption of ne is.] None is; not is. Obsolete.

Thou findest fault, where nys to be found,
And buldest strong work upon a weak ground. Spenser.

OAK

O Has in English a long sound; as, oak, groan, bone, alone, cloak, broke, coal, droll; or short, get, knot, shot, grog, long. It is usually denoted long by a ferule a subjoined; as, oak, or by e at the end of the syllable; as, bone: when these vowels are not appended, it is generally short, except before ll; as, droll, scall, and even then sometimes short, as, fall.
 1. O is used as an interjection of wishing or exclamation. O that we, who have resisted all the designs of his love, would now try to defeat that of his anger! Decay of Piety.
O! were he present, that his eyes and hands might see, and urge, the death which he commands. Dryd.
 2. O is used with no great elegance by Shakespeare for a circle or oval.

Can this cockpit hold
 The vasty field of France? or may we cram Within this wooden O, the very casks
 That did affright the air at Agincourt?
Shaksp.
OAF. n. f. [This word is variously written; auff, ose, and oph; it seems a corruption of ouph, a demon or fairy, in German alf, from which elf: and means properly the fame with changeling; a foolish child left by malevolent ouphs or fairies, in the place of one more witty, which they steal away.]

1. A changeling; a foolish child left by the fairies. These, when a child happens to be got, Which after proves an idiot, When folk perceive it thriveth not, The fault therein to mother: Some silly doating brainless calf, That understands things by the half, Says that the fairy left this oaf, And took away the other. Dryd. Nymphid.

2. A dolt; a blockhead; an idiot. OAFISH. adj. [from oaf.] Stupid; dull; doltish. OAFISHNESS. n. f. [from oafish.] Stupidity; dullness.

OAK. n. f. [ac, æc, Saxon; which, says Skinner, to shew how easy it is to play the fool, under a shew of literature and deep researches, I will, for the diversion of my reader, derive from oisse, a house; the oak being the best timber for building. Skinner seems to have had Junius in his thoughts, who on this very word has shewn his usual fondness for Greek etymology, by a derivation more ridiculous than that by which Skinner has ridiculed him. de or oak, says the grave critic, signified among the Saxons, like robor among the Latins, not only an oak but strength, and may be well enough derived, non incommode deduci potest, from oak, strength; by taking the three first letters and then sinking the a, as is not uncommon.]

The oak-tree hath male flowers, or katkins, which consist of a great number of small slender threads. The embryos, which produced at remote distances from these on the same tree, do afterwards become acorns, which are produced in hard scaly cups: the leaves are finuated. The species are five. Miller. He return'd with his brows bound with oak. Shaksp.

He lay along
 Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shaksp.
 No tree beareth so many bastard fruits as the oak: for besides the acorns, it beareth galls, oak apples, oak nuts, which are inflammable, and oak berries, sticking close to the body of the tree without stalk. Bacon's Nat. History.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
 Shoots rising up and spreads by slow degrees:
 Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
 Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dry.
 An oak growing from a plant to a great tree, and then lopped, is still the same oak. Locke.
 A light earthy, stony, and sparry matter, incruited and affixed to oak leaves. Woodward on Foss.
 In the days of Homer every grove, river, fountain, and oak tree, were thought to have their peculiar deities. Odyss.

 Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
 The weeping amber and the balsam tree,
 While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
 And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.

OAK. [Evergreen.] The leaves are, for the most part, indented, or finuated, and in some the edges of the leaves are prickly, and are evergreen: it hath amaranthaceous flowers, which are produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree: the fruit is an acorn like the common oak. The wood of this tree is accounted very good for many sorts of tools and utensils; and affords the most durable charcoal in the world. Miller.
OAKAPPLE. n. f. [oak and apple.] A kind of spongy excrescence on the oak.

Another kind of excrescence is an exudation of plants joined with putrefaction, as in oakapples, which are found chiefly upon the leaves of oaks. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
OAKEN. adj. [from oak.] Made of oak; gathered from oak. No nation doth equal England for oaken timber wherewith to build ships. Bacon's Advice to Villains.

By lot from Jove I am the pow'r
 Of this fair wood, and live in oaken bow'r. Milton.
 Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
 With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.
 An oaken garland to be worn on festivals, was the recompense of one who had covered a citizen in battle. Adrian.
 He matched a good tough oaken cudgel, and began to brandish it. Arbutnot's J. Bull.

OAKENPIN. n. f. An apple. Oakenpin, so called from its hardness, is a lasting fruit, yields excellent liquor, and is near the nature of the Westbury apple, though not in form. Mortimer.
OAKUM. n. f. [A word probably formed by some corruption.] Cords untwisted and reduced to hemp, with which, mingled with pitch, leaks are flopped.

They make their oakum, wherewith they chalk the seams of the ships, of old sear and weather beaten ropes, when they are over spent and grown so rotten as they serve for no other use but to make rotten oakum, which moulders and wastes away with every sea as the ships labour and are tossed. Rel.
 Some drive old oakum thro' each seam and rift;
 Their left hand does the calking-iron guide;
 The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryden.

OAR. n. f. [Lape, Saxon; perhaps by allusion to the common expression of plowing the water, from the same root with oar, to plow, ara, Lat.] A long pole with a broad end, by which vessels are driven in the water, the resistance made by water to the oar pushing on the vessel.

The oars were silver,
 Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
 The water which they beat, to follow faster,
 As amorous of their strokes. Shaksp. Jul. Cæs.

So tow'rd a ship the oar-fin'd galleys ply,
 Which wanting sea to ride, or wind to fly,
 Stands but to fall reveng'd. Dehnam's Poem.
 In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
 And untaught Indian, on the stream did glide,
 E'er sharp-keel'd boats to ston the flood did learn,
 Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryden.

Its progressive motion may be effected by the help of several oars, which in the outward ends of them shall be like the fins of a fish to contract and dilate. Willm.

To OAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To row. He more undaunted on the ruin rode,
 And oar'd with labouring arms along the flood. Pope.

To OAR. v. a. To impel by rowing. His bold head
 'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
 Himself with his good arms in hilly strokes
 To th' shore. Shaksp. Temp.

OAR.

OBD

OAR. adj. [from oar.] Having the form or use of oars. His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet,
 In flimsy films, and shape his oary feet. Addison.
 The swan with arched neck,
 Between her white wings mandling, proudly rows
 Her state with oary feet. Milton.

OAST. n. f. A kiln. Not in use. Empty the binn into a hog-bag, and carry them immediately to the oast or kiln, to be dried. Mortimer.

OATCAKE. n. f. [oat and cake.] Cake made of the meal of oats. Take a blue stone they make haver or oatcakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peacham.

OATEN. adj. [from oat.] Made of oats; bearing oats. When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
 And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks. Shaksp.

OATH. n. f. [oath, Gothick; ad, Saxon. The distance between the noun oath, and the verb swear, is very observable, as it may shew that our oldest dialect is formed from different languages.] An affirmation, negation, or promise, corroborated by the attestation of the Divine Being.

Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,
 For whole dear sake thou then did'st rend thy faith
 Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths Descended into perjury to love me. Shaksp. Peacem.
 He that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hills as I am a soldier.

An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abate. Shaksp.
 We have confutations, which inventions shall be published, which not: and take an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret. Bacon.

Those called to any office of trust, are bound by an oath to the faithful discharge of it: but an oath is an appeal to God, and therefore can have no influence, except upon those who believe that he is. Swift.

OATHABLE. adj. [from oath.] A word not used.] Capable of having an oath administered.

You're not oathable,
 Altho' I know you'll swear
 Into strong shudders th' immortal gods. Shaksp. Peacem.

OATBREAKING. n. f. [oat and break.] Perjury; the violation of an oath. His oatbreaking he mended thus,
 By now forswearing that he is forsworn. Shaksp. Hen. IV.

OATMALT. n. f. [oat and malt.] Malt made of oats. In Kent they brew with one half oatmalt, and the other half barley-malt. Mortimer's Hist.

OATMEAL. n. f. [oat and meal.] Flower made by grinding oats. Oatmeal and butter, outwardly applied, dry the scab on the head.

Our neighbours tell me oft, in joking talk,
 Of aches, leather, oatmeal, bran, and chalk. Gay.
OATMEAL. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.

OATS. n. f. [acen, Saxon.] A grain, which in England is generally given to horses, but in Scotland supports the people. It is of the grass leaved tribe; the flowers have no petals, and are disposed in a loose panicle: the grain is eatable. The meal makes tolerable good bread. Miller.

The oats have eaten the horses. Shaksp. Peacem.
 It is bare mechanism, no otherwise produced than the turning of a wild oatheart, by the insinuation of the particles of moisture. Locke.

For your lean cattle, fodder them with barley straw first, and the oat straw last. Mortimer's Husbandry.

His horse's allowance of oats and beans, was greater than the journey required. Swift.

OATTHISTLE. n. f. [oat and thistle.] An herb. Ainsworth.
OBAMBULATION. n. f. [obambulation, from obambulo, Latin.] The act of walking about. Dict.

To OBDUCE. v. a. [obduce, Latin.] To draw over as a covering. No animal exhibits its face in the native colour of its skin but man; all others are covered with feathers, hair, or a cortex that is obduced over the cutis. Hale.

OBDUCTION. n. f. [from obductio, obduco, Latin.] The act of covering, or laying a cover. Hale.

OBDRUACY. n. f. [from obdruo.] Inflexible wickedness; impudence; hardness of heart. Thou think'st me as far in the Devil's book, as thou and Fallstaff, for obdruracy and perversity. Shaksp. Hen. IV.

God may, by a mighty grace, hinder the absolute completion of sin in final obdruracy. South's Serm.

OBDRUATE. adj. [obdrutus, Latin.] Hard of heart; inflexibly obdurate in ill; hardened; impatient. Oh! let me teach thee for thy father's sake,
 That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee;
 Be not obdruate, open thy deaf ears. Shaksp. Peacem.

If when you make your pray'rs,

OBE

God should be so obdurate as yourselves, Shaksp.
 How would it fare with your departed souls?
 Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
 Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shaksp.
 To convince the proud what signs avail,
 Or wonders move th' obdurate to relent;
 They harden'd more, by what might more reclaim. Milt.
Obdurate as you are, oh! hear at least
 My dying prayers, and grant my last request. Dryden.

2. Hardened; firm; stubborn. Sometimes the very custom of evil makes the heart obdurate against whatsoever instructions to the contrary. Hooker.

A pleasing forcery could charm
 Pain for a while, or anguish, and excite Fallacious hope, or arm th' obdurate breast
 With stubborn patience, as with triple steel. Milton.

No such thought ever strikes his marble, obdurate heart, but it presently flies off and rebounds from it. It is impossible for a man to be thorough-paced in ingratitude, till he has shook off all fetters of pity and compassion. South.

3. Harsh; rugged. They joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel. Swift.

OBDRUATELY. adv. [from obdrutus.] Stubbornly; inflexibly; impatiently. OBDRUATENESS. n. f. [from obdrutus.] Stubbornness; inflexibility; impudence.

OBDRUATION. n. f. [from obdrutus.] Hardness of heart; stubbornness. What occasion it had given them to think, to their greater obdruation in evil, that through a forward and wanton desire of innovation, we did contraindly those things, for which conscience was pretended? Hooker, b. iv.

OBDRUDED. adj. [obdrutus, Latin.] Hardened; inflexible; impatient. This saw his hapless foes, but stood obdrud'd,
 And to rebellious fight rallied their pow'r's Infeniate. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

OBE. n. f. [obedience, Fr. obediencia, Latin.] Obsequiousness; submission to authority; compliance with command or prohibition. If you violently proceed against him, it would shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. Shaksp. Lear.

Thy husband
 Craves no other tribute at thy hands,
 But love, fair looks, and true obedience. Shaksp.

His servants ye are, to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness. Rom. vi. 16.
 It was both a strange commission, and a strange obedience to a commission, for men so furiously assailed, to hold their hands. Bacon's War with Spain.

Nor can this be,
 But by fulfilling that which thou dost want,
 Obedience to the law of God, imposed
 On penalty of death. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

OBE. n. f. [obediens, Latin.] Submissive to authority; compliant with command or prohibition; obsequious. To this end did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things. 2 Cor. ii. 9.

To this her mother's plot
 She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise. Shaksp. M. IV. of W.

He humbled himself, and became obedient unto death. Phil. ii. 8.

Religion hath a good influence upon the people, to make them obedient to government, and peaceable one towards another. Tillotson, Serm. 3.

The chief his orders gives; th' obedient band,
 With due observance, wait the chief's command. Pope.

OBE. n. f. [obediens, Latin.] Submissive to authority; compliant with command or prohibition; obsequious. To this end did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things. 2 Cor. ii. 9.

OBESENES. n. f. [from obese.] Morbid fatiess; insum-OBESENITY. } brance of flesh.
On these many diseases depend; as on the straitness of the chest, a phthisis; on the largeness of the veins, an atrophy; on their smallness, obesity. Grew's Cosmol. b. ii.
- TO OBEY. v. a. [obire, French; obedi, Latin.]
1. To pay submission to; to comply with, from reverence to authority.
The will of heav'n
Be done in this and all things! I obey. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.
I am asham'd, that women are so simple
To seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shakesp.
Let not sin reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof. Rom. vi. 12.
Was she thy God, that her thou didst obey,
Before his voice? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
Africa and India shall his pow'r obey,
He shall extend his propagated sway. Dryden.
2. It had formerly sometimes to before the person obeyed, which Addison has mentioned as one of Milton's latinisms; but it is frequent in old writers; when we borrowed the French word we borrowed the syntax, obedi au roi.
He commanded the trumpets to sound; to which the two brave knights obeying, they performed their courses, breaking their staves. Sidney.
- The fit bark, obeying to her mind,
Forth launched quickly, as she did desire. Fairy Q.
His servants ye are, to whom ye obey. Rom. vi. 16.
Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel,
Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. Milton.
- OBJECT. n. f. [object, Fr. objectum, Latin.]
1. That about which any power or faculty is employed.
Pardon
The flat unrais'd spirit, that hath dar'd,
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object. Shakespeare's Henry V.
They are her farthest reaching instrument,
Yet they no beams unto their objects send;
But all the rays are from their objects sent,
And in the eyes with pointed angles end. Davies.
The object of true faith is, either God himself, or the word of God: God who is believed in, and the word of God as the rule of faith, or matter to be believed. Hamm.
Those things in ourselves, are the only proper objects of our zeal, which, in others, are the unquestionable subjects of our praises. Sprat's Sermon.
Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of the will. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. Something presented to the senses to raise any affection or emotion in the mind.
Dishonour not your eye
By throwing it on any other object. Shakesp.
Why else this double object in our sight,
Of flight pur'd in the air, and o'er the ground. Milton.
This passenger felt some degree of concern, at the sight of so moving an object, and therefore withdrew. Atterbury.
3. [In grammar.] Any thing influenced by a verb transitive, or a sentence in room thereof, is called, by grammarians, the object of the verb. Clarke's Latin Grammar.
- OBJECT-GLASS. n. f. Glass remotest from the eye.
An object-glass of a telescope I once mended, by grinding it on pitch with putty, and leaning easily on it in the grinding, lest the putty should scratch it. Newt. Opt.
- TO OBJECT. v. a. [objecter, Fr. objicere, Latin.]
1. To oppose; to present in opposition.
Flowers growing scattered in divers beds, will shew more so as that they be object to view at once. Bacon.

OBL

- Pallas to their eyes
The mist objected, and condens'd the skies. Pope.
2. To propose as a charge criminal; or a reason adverse, with to or against.
Were it not some kind of blemish to be like unto Infidels and Heathens, it would not so usually be objected, men would not think it any advantage in the cause of religion to be able therewith justly to charge their adversaries. Hobbs.
The book requir'd due examination, and giveth liberty to object any crime against any such as are to be ordered. White.
- Men in all deliberations find ease to be of the negative side, and affect a credit to object and forest difficulties: for when propositions are denied, there is an end of them; but if they be allowed, it requir'd a new work; which false point of wisdom is the bane of business. Bacon.
This the adversaries of faith have too much reason to object against too many of its professors; but against the faith itself nothing at all. Sprat's Sermon.
It was objected against a late painter, that he drew many graceful pictures, but few of them were like. Dryden.
Others object the poverty of the nation, and difficulties in furnishing greater supplies. Addison's State of the War.
There was but this single fault that Erasmus, though an enemy, could object to him. Aurthur.
- OBJECTION. n. f. [objection, Fr. objection, Latin.]
1. The act of presenting any thing in opposition.
2. Criminal charge.
Speak on, Sir,
I dare your worst objections. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
3. Adverse argument.
There is ever between all estates a secret war. I know well this speech is the objection and not the decision; and that it is after refused. Bacon's War with Spain.
Whoever makes such objections against an hypothesis, hath a right to be heard, let his temper and genius be what it will. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. Fault found.
I have shewn your verses to some, who have made that objection to them. Waller's Letter.
- OBJECTIVE. adj. [objectif, Fr. objectif, Latin.]
1. Belonging to the object; contained in the object.
Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective. Objective certainty is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. The one is in things, the other in our minds. Waller's Logic.
2. Made an object; proposed as an object.
If this one small piece of nature still affords new matter for our discovery, when should we be able to search out the vast treasures of objective knowledge that lies within the compass of the universe? Hale's Origin of Man.
- OBJECTIVELY. adv. [from objective.]
1. In manner of an object.
This may fitly be called a determinate idea, when such as it is at any time objectively in the mind, it is annexed, and without variation determined to an articulate sound, which is to be steadily the sign of that very same object of the mind. Locke's Epistle to the Reader.
2. In a state of opposition.
The basilisk should be destroyed, in regard he first receiveth the rays of his antipathy and venomous emission, which objectively move his sense. Brown's P. Er.
- OBJECTIVENESS. n. f. [from objective.] The state of being an object.
Is there such a motion or objectiveness of external bodies, which produceth light? The faculty of light is fitted to receive that impression or objectiveness, and that objectively fitted to that faculty. Hale's Origin of Man.
- OBJECTOR. n. f. [from object.] One who offers objections; one who raises difficulties.
But these objectors must the cause upbraid,
That has not mortal man, immortal made. Bacon.
Let the objectors consider, that these irregularities must have come from the laws of mechanism. Bentley's Sermon.
- OBITU. [a corruption of obit, or obviti.] Funeral obsequies. Asch.
- TO OBJURGATE. v. a. [objurgare, Latin.] To chide; to reprove.
OBJURATION. n. f. [objurgatio, Latin.] Reproof; reprehension.
If there be no true liberty, but all things come to pass by inevitable necessity, then what are all interrogations and objurgations, and reprehensions and expostulations? Brown.
- OBJURGATORY. adj. [objurgatorius, Latin.] Reprehensory; culpatory; chiding.
OBLATE. adj. [oblatus, Latin.] Flatted at the poles. Used of a spheroid.
By gravitation bodies on this globe will press towards its center, though not exactly thither, by reason of the spheroidical figure of the earth, arising from its diurnal rotation about its axis. Chene's Phil. Prin.

- spheroidical figure of the earth, arising from its diurnal rotation about its axis. Chene's Phil. Prin.
- OBLETION. n. f. [oblatus, Latin.] An offering; a sacrifice; any thing offered as an act of worship or reverence. With that she looked upon the picture before her, and straight sigh'd, and straight tears followed, as if the idol of straight sigh'd, and straight tears followed, as if the idol of duty ought to be honoured with such oblations. Sidney.
Many conceive in this oblation, not a natural but a civil kind of death, and a separation from the world. Brown.
The will gives worth to the oblation, as to God's acceptance, sets the poorest gift upon the same level with the richest. South's Sermons.
- I wish
The kind oblation of a falling tear. Dryden.
Behold the coward, and the brave,
All make oblations at this shrine. Swift's Poems.
- OBLECTATION. n. f. [oblectatio, Latin.] Delight; pleasure.
TO OBLIGATE. v. a. [obligare, Latin.] To bind by contract or duty.
OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, from oblige, Latin. obligatio, Fr.]
1. The binding power of any oath, vow, duty; contract.
Your father lost a father;
That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term,
To do obsequious sorrow. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
There was no means for him as a christian, to satisfy all obligations both to God and man, but to offer himself for a mediator of an accord and peace. Bacon's Henry VII.
The better to satisfy this double obligation, you have early cultivated the genius you have to arms. Dryden.
No ties can bind, that from constraint arise,
Where either's forc'd, all obligation dies. Granville.
2. An act which binds any man to some performance.
The heir of an obliged person is not bound to make restitution, if the obligation passed only by a personal act; but if it passed from his person to his estate, then the estate passes with all its burthen. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
3. Favour by which one is bound to gratitude.
Where is the obligation of any man's making me a present of what he does not care for himself? L'Estrange.
So quick a sense did the Israelites entertain of the merits of Gideon, and the obligation he had laid upon them, that they tender him the regal and hereditary government of that people. South's Sermons.
- OBLIGATORY. adj. [obligatoire, Fr. from obligate.] Imposing an obligation; binding; coercive; with to or on.
And concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to Christian princes and states. Bac.
As long as the law is obligatory, so long our obedience is due. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
A people long used to hardships, look upon themselves as creatures at mercy, and that all impositions laid on them by a stronger hand, are legal and obligatory. Swift.
If this parent is obligatory on them, it is contrary to acts of parliament, and therefore void. Swift.
- TO OBLIGE. v. a. [obliger, Fr. obliger, Latin.]
1. To bind; to impose obligation; to compel to something.
Religion oblige men to the practice of those virtues which conduce to the preservation of our health. Tillotson.
The law must oblige in all precepts, or in none. If it oblige in all, all are to be obeyed; if it oblige in none, it has no longer the authority of a law. Rogers, Sermon 15.
2. To induce; to lay obligations of gratitude.
He that depends upon another, must oblige his honour with a boundless trust. Waller.
Since love oblige not, I from this hour
Assume the right of man's despotic power.
Vain wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light.
Thus man by his own strength to heaven wou'd soar,
And wou'd not be oblig'd to God for more.
When int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits or to the scaffold or the cell. Pope.
To those hills we are oblig'd far all our metals, and with them for all the conveniences and comforts of life. Bentley.
3. To please; to gratify.
A great man gets more by obliging his inferior, than by disdaining him; as a man has a greater advantage by sowing and dressing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it. South's Sermons.
Some natures are so sour and so ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged. L'Estrange.
Happy the people, who preserve their honour
By the same duties that oblige their prince! Add. Cato.
- OBLIGEE. n. f. [from oblige.] The person bound by a legal or written contract.
OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligement, French.] Obligation.

OBL

- I will not resist, whatever it is, either of divine or human obligement, that you lay upon me. Milton's Education.
Let this fair prince's but one minute stay,
A look from her will your obligements pay. Dryden.
- OBLIGER. n. f. He who binds by contract.
OBLIGING. part. adj. [obligant, Fr. from oblige.] Civil; complaisant; respectful; engaging.
Nothing could be more obliging and respectful than the lion's letter was, in appearance; but there was death in the true intent. L'Estrange, Fab. 54.
Monseigneur Strozzi has many curiosities, and is very obliging to a stranger who desires the sight of them. Addison.
Obliging creatures! make me see
All that disgrac'd my betters, met in me. Pope.
So obliging that he ne'er oblig'd. Pope.
- OBLIGINGLY. adv. [from obliging.] Civilly; complaisantly.
Eugenius informs me very obligingly, that he never thought he should have disliked any passage in my paper. Addison.
I see her taste each nauseous draught,
And so obligingly am caught;
I bless the hand from whence they came;
Nor dare distort my face for shame. Swift's Miscell.
- OBLINGNESS. n. f. [from obliging.]
1. Obligation; force.
They look into them not to weigh the obligingness, but to quarrel the difficulty of the injunctions: not to direct practice, but excuse prevarications. Decay of Piety.
2. Civility; complaisance.
OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, from oblige, Latin.] Declination from perpendicularity; obliquity.
The change made by the obligation of the eyes, is least in colours of the densest than in thin substances. Newt. Opt.
- OBLIQUE. adj. [oblique, Fr. obliquus, Latin.]
1. Not direct; not perpendicular; not parallel.
One by his view
Mought deem him born with ill-dispos'd skies,
When oblique Saturn sat in the boufe of th' agonies. Fairy Q.
If sound be stopped and repercussed, it cometh about on the other side in an oblique line. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
May they not pity us, condemn'd to bear
The various heav'n of an oblique sphere;
While by fix'd laws, and with a just return,
They feel twelve hours that shade, for twelve that burn. Prior.
- Bavaria's stars must be accus'd which shone
That fatal day the mighty work was done,
With rays oblique upon the gallic sun. Prior.
It has a direction oblique to that of the former motion. Chene's Phil. Prin.
- Criticks form a general character from the observation of particular errors, taken in their own oblique or imperfect views; which is as unjust, as to make a judgment of the beauty of a man's body, from the shade it casts in such and such a position. Notes on the Odyssey.
2. Not direct. Used of sense.
Has he given the lie
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel; you must challenge him. Shakesp.
3. [In grammar.] Any case in nouns except the nominative.
OBLIQUELY. adv. [from oblique.]
1. Not directly; not perpendicularly.
Of meridian altitude, it hath but twenty-three degrees, so that it plays but obliquely upon us, and as the sun doth about the twenty-third of January.
Declining from the noon of day,
The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray. Po. Ra. Locke.
2. Not in the immediate or direct meaning.
His discourse tends obliquely to the detracting from others, or the extolling of himself. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 255.
- OBLIQUENESS. n. f. [obliquitas, Fr. from oblique.]
OBLIQUITY. n. f. [obliquitas, Fr. from oblique.]
1. Deviation from physical rectitude; deviation from parallelism or perpendicularity.
Which else to several spheres thou must ascribe, Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities. Milt. P. Legl.
2. Deviation from moral rectitude.
There is in rectitude, beauty; as contrariwise in obliquity, deformity.
Count Rhodophil cut out for government and high affairs, and balancing all matters in the scales of his high understanding, hath rectified all obliquities. Harold's Vocal For.
For a rational creature to conform himself to the will of God in all things, carries in it a rational rectitude, or goodness; and to disobey or oppose his will in any thing, imports a moral obliquity. South's Sermons.
- TO OBLITERATE. v. a. [oblitero, ob and littera, Latin.]
1. To efface any thing written.
2. To wear out; to destroy; to efface.
Wars and desolations obliterate many ancient monuments.
Let men consider themselves as enlivened in that unhappy contract, Hale's Origin of Mankind.

O B N

contract, which has rendered them part of the Devil's possession, and contrive how they may obliterate that reproach, and disentangle their mortgaged souls. Dewey of Piety.
These simple ideas, the understanding can no more refuse to have, or alter, or blot them out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate the images, which the objects set before it produce. Locke.

OBLETERATION. n. f. [obliteratio, Latin.] Effacement; extinction.

Considering the casualties of wars, transigrations, especially that of the general flood, there might probably be an obliteration of all those monuments of antiquity that ages precede at some time have yielded. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
OBIVION. n. f. [obivion, Latin.]

1. Forgetfulness; cessation of remembrance.
Water-drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind obivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are graced
To dusty nothing. Shaksp. Tril. and Cressida.
Thou shouldst have heard many things of worthy memory,
Which now shall die in obivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave. Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.
Knowledge is made by obivion, and to purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brown's Vulgar Err. Pref.

Can they imagine, that God has therefore forgot their sins, because they are not willing to remember them? Or will they measure his pardon by their own obivion. South.
Among our crimes obivion may be set;
But 'tis our king's perfection to forget. Dryden.

2. Amnely; general pardon of crimes in a state.
By the act of obivion, all offences against the crown, and all particular trespasses between subject and subject, were pardoned, remitted, and utterly extinguished. Darwin.

OBLIVIOUS. adj. [obliviosus, Latin.] Causing forgetfulness.
Raze out the written troubles of the brain,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Exult to see the crowding ghosts descend
Unnumber'd; well aveng'd, they quit the cares
Of mortal life, and drink th' oblivious lake. Philips.
Oh born to see what none can see awake!
Behold the wonders of th' oblivious lake. Pope's Dunci.

OBLONG. adj. [oblong, Fr. oblongus, Latin.] Longer than equal.
The best figure of a garden I esteem an oblong upon a descent. Temple's Miscell.

Every particle, supposing them globular or not very oblong, would be above nine million times their own length from any other particle. Bentley's Sermons.

OBLONGLY. adv. [from oblong.] In an oblong direction.
The surface of the temperate climates is larger than it would have been, had the globe of our earth or of the planets, been either spherical, or oblongly spheroidal. Cheyne.

OBLONGNESS. n. f. [from oblong.] The state of being oblong.
OBLIQUE. n. f. [obliquus, Lat.]

1. Cenurious speech; blame; slander; reproach.
Reasonable moderation hath freed us from being deservedly subject unto that bitter kind of obliquy, whereby as the church of Rome doth, under the colour of love towards those things which be harmless, maintain extremely most hurtful corruptions; so we peradventure might be upbraided, that under colour of hatred towards those things that are corrupt, we are on the other side as extreme, even against most harmless ordinances. Hickes, b. iv. f. 14.

Here new aspersions, with new obliquities,
Are laid on old defects. Daniel's Civil War.
Canst thou with impious obliquy condemn
The just decree of God, pronounce'd and sworn? Milton.
Shall names that made your city the glory of the earth, be mentioned with obliquy and detraction? Addison.

Every age might perhaps produce one or two true genius, if they were not sunk under the censure and obliquy of plodding, servile, imitating pedants. Swift.

2. Cause of reproach; disgrace. Not proper.
My chastity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obliquy 't' world
In me to lose. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

OBMUTESCENCE. n. f. [from obmutescere, Latin.] Loss of speech.

A vehement fear often produceth obmutescences. Brown.

OBNOXIOUS. n. f. [obnoxius, Latin.]

1. Subject.
I propound a character of justice in a middle form, between the speculative discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers, which are tied and obnoxious to their particular laws. Bacon's Holy War.

2. Liable to punishment.

O B S

All are obnoxious, and this faulty land,
Like fainting Hæster, does before you stand, Watching your sceptre. Haller.

We know ourselves obnoxious to God's severe justice, and that he is a God of mercy and hatred sin; and therefore that we might not have the least suspicion of his unwillingness to forgive, he hath sent his only begotten son into the world, by his dismal sufferings and cursed death, to expire our offences. Cantabrigia's Sermon.

Thy name, O Varus, if the kinder powers
Preserve our plains, and shield the Mantuan towers, Obnoxious by Cremona's neighb'ring crime,
The wings of swans, and stronger pinion'd rhyme Shall raise aloft. Dryd.

3. Liable; exposed.
Long hostility had made their friendship weak in itself,
And more obnoxious to jealousies and distrusts. Hayward.
But what will not ambition and revenge
Defend to? who aspires, must down as low
As high he soared; obnoxious first or last,
To base things. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To dew obnoxious on the grassy floor.

OBNOXIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obnoxius.] Subjection; liability to punishment.

1. Immodest; not agreeable to chastity of mind; causing low ideas.
Chemos th' obscene dread of Moab's sons. Milton.
Words that were once chaste, by frequent use grow obscene and uncleanly. Watts's Logic.

2. Offensive; disgusting.
A girdle foul with grease binds his obscene attire. Dryden.
Home as they went, the sad discourse renew'd,
Of the relentless dame to death purld,
And of the light obscene to lately view'd. Dryden.

3. Inauspicious; ill omened.
Care shuns thy walks, as at the cheerful light
The groaning ghosts, and birds obscene take flight. Dryd.
It is the sun's fate like your's, to be displeasing to owls and obscene animals, who cannot bear his lustre. Pope's Lett.

OBSCENELY. adv. [from obscene.] In an impure and unchaste manner.

OBSCENESS. n. f. [obscenitas, Fr. from obscene.] Impurity of thought or language; unchastity; lewdness.

Mr. Cowley asserts plainly, that obscenity has no place in wit.

Those fables were tempered with the Italian severity, and free from any note of infamy or obscenity. Dryden.

Thou art wickedly devout,
In Tiber ducking thrice by break of day,
To wash th' obscenities of night away. Dryden.

No pardon vile obscenity should find,
Tho' wit and art conspire to move your mind. Pope.

OBSCURATION. n. f. [obscuratione, Lat.]

1. The act of darkening.
As to the sun and moon, their obscuration or change of colour happens commonly before the eruption of a fiery mountain. Barrow.

2. A state of being darkened.

OBSCURE. adj. [obscurus, Fr. obscurus, Latin.]

1. Dark; unlightened; gloomy, hindring light.
Who's curst his father or mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness. Prov. xx. 20.

Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss,
And thro' the palpable obscure find out
His uncouth way? Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Living in the dark.
The obscure bird clamour'd the live-long night. Shaksp.

3. Not easily intelligible; abstruse; difficult.
I explain some of the most obscure passages, and those which are most necessary to be understood, and this according to the manner wherein he us'd to express himself. Dryd.

4. Not noted; not observable.
He says, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose, that is in the dark.

To OBSCURE. v. a. [obscurare, Latin.]

1. To darken; to make dark.
Sudden the thunder blackens all the skies,
And the winds whistle, and the furies roll
Mountains on mountains, and obscure the pole. Pope.

2. To

O B S

2. To make less visible.
They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscured lights; which at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night. Shaksp.

What must I hold a candle to my flames?
They in themselves, good foot, are too, too light.

Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscured by godlike from God.

Thinking by this retirement to obscure himself from God,
He infringed the omniscience and essential ubiquity of his maker. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

3. To make less intelligible.
By private content it hath been used in dangerous times to obscure writing, and make it hard to be read by others not acquainted with the intrigue. Haller.

There is scarce any duty which has been so obscured by the writings of learned men, as this. Wake.

4. To make less glorious, beautiful, or illustrious.
Think it thou, vain spirit, thy glories are the same,
And feast not in obscure thy godlike frame?
I know thee not what thy faded looks did hide. Dryden.

5. To make less intelligible.
Not brightly; not luminously.

6. Out of light; privately; without notice; not conspicuously.
Such was the rise of this prodigious fire,
Which in mean buildings first obscurely bred,
From thence did soon to open streets aspire. Dryden.

There live retir'd,
Content thyself to be obscurely good. Addison's Cato.

Let him go, purged by silent wrath,
Meet unexpected daggers in his way,
And in some distant land obscurely die. Irene.

3. Not clearly; not plainly.

OBSCURITIES. n. f. [obscuritas, Lat. obscuritas, Fr.]

1. Darknes; want of light.
Lo! a day of darkness and obscurity, tribulation and anguish, upon the earth. Esther xi. 8.

Should Cynthia quit thee, Venus, and each star,
It would not form one thought dark as mine are:
I could lend them obscurer now, and lay,
Out of myself there should be no more day. Donne.

2. Unnoticed state; privacy.
You are not for obscurity design'd,
But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind. Dryd.

3. Darknes of meaning.
Not to mention that obscurer that attends prophetic raptures, there are divers things knowable by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscurer. Boyle on Colours.

That this part of sacred scripture had difficulties in it: many causes of obscurity did readily occur to me. Locke.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the undetermined confusion of a negative idea, wherein I know I do not comprehend all I would, it being too large for a finite capacity. Locke.

OBSCURATION. n. f. [obscuratio, from obscurus, Lat.] Intracacy; supplication.

That these were comprehended under the sacra, is manifest from the old form of obscuration. Stillingfleet.

OBSEQUIES. n. f. [obseques, French. I know not whether this word be not anciently mistaken for exequies, exequies, Latin: this word, however, is apparently derived from obsequium.]

1. Funeral rites; funeral solemnities.

There was Dorlaus valiantly requiring his friends help, in a great battle deprived of life, his obsequies being not more solemnized by the tears of his partakers, than the blood of his enemies. Sidney, b. ii.

Fair Juliet, that with angels dost remain,
Accept this latest favour at my hand;
That living honour'd thee, and being dead,
With funeral obsequies adorn thy tomb. Shaksp.

These tears are my sweet Rutland's obsequies. Shaksp.

I spare the widows tears, their woful cries,
And howling at their husbands obsequies;
How Thebes at these fun'rals did assist,
And with what gifts the mourning dames dismiss. Dryden.

His body shall be royally interr'd,
I will, myself,
Be the chief mourner at his obsequies. Dryden.

Alas! poor Poll, my Indian talker dies,
Go birds and celebrate his obsequies. Creech.

2. It is found in the singular, perhaps more properly.
Or tune a song of victory to me,
Or to thyself, sing thine own obsequy. Crashaw.

Him I'll solemnly attend,
With silent obsequy and funeral train,
Home to his father's house. Milton's Agonistes.

O B S

OBSEQUIOUS. adj. [from obsequium, Latin.]

1. Obedient; compliant; not resisting.
Adore not so the rising son, that you forget the father, who raised you to this height; nor be you so obsequious to the father, that you give just cause to the son to suspect that you neglect him. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

At his command th' up-rooted hills retir'd
Each to his place; they heard his voice, and went Obsequious. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I follow'd her; she what was honour knew,
And with obsequious majesty, approv'd
My pleaded reason. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

A genial cherishing heat acts so upon the fit and obsequious matter, as to organize and fashion it according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.

His servants weeping, Obsequious to his orders, bear him hither. Add. Cato.

The vote of an assembly, which we cannot reconcile to public good, has been conceived in a private brain, afterwards supported by an obsequious party. Swift.

2. In Shakespeare it seems to signify, funeral; such as the rites of funerals require.

Your father lost a father;
That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term, Shaksp. Hamlet.

To do obsequious honour.

OBSEQUIOUSLY. adv. [from obsequious.]

1. Obediently; with compliance.
They rise, and with respectful awe,
At the word giv'n, obsequiously withdraw. Dryden.

We cannot reasonably expect, that any one should readily and obsequiously quit his own opinion, and embrace ours with a blind resignation. Locke.

2. In Shakespeare it signifies, with funeral rites; with reverence for the dead.

I a while obsequiously lament
The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster. Shaksp. R. III.

OBSEQUIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obsequious.] Obedience; compliance.

They apply themselves both to his interest and humour, with all the arts of flattery and obsequiousness, the surest and the readiest ways to advance a man. South's Sermons.

OBSEQUIOUSLY. adv. [from obsequious, Lat.] Remarkable; eminent; such as may deserve notice.

These proprieties affixed unto bodies from considerations deduced from east, west, or those obsequious points of the sphere, will not be justified from such foundations. Brown.

I took a just account of every obsequious circumstance of the earth, stone, metal, or other matter, from the surface quite down to the bottom of the pit, and entered it carefully into a journal. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

The great and more obsequious occasions of exercising our courage, occur but seldom. Rogers.

OBSEQUIOUSLY. adv. [from obsequious.] In a manner worthy of note.

It is prodigious to have thunder in a clear sky, as is obsequiously recorded in some histories. Brown's Vulgar Err.

OBSEQUIOUSNESS. n. f. [obsequiositas, Fr. obsequiosus, Latin.]

1. Respect; ceremonial reverence.
In the wood, a league without the town,
Where I did meet thee once with Helena,
To do obsequious on the morn of May. Shakespeare.

Arcite left his bed, resolv'd to pay Obsequious to the month of merry May. Dryden.

2. Religious rite.
Some represent to themselves the whole of religion as consisting in a few easy obsequies, and never lay the least restraint on the business or diversions of this life. Rogers.

3. Attentive practice.
Use all th' obsequies of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent
To please his grandam. Shaksp. M. of Venice.

If the divine laws were proposed to our obsequies, with no other motive than the advantages attending it, they would be little more than an advice. Rogers, Sermon 1.

4. Rule of practice.
There are other strict obsequies;
As, not to see a woman. Shaksp. I. Labours Lost.

5. Careful obedience.
We must attend our creator in all those ordinances which he has prescribed to the obsequies of his church. Rogers.

6. Observation; attention.
There can be no observation or experience of greater certainty, as to the increase of mankind, than the strict and vigilant obsequies of the calculations and registers of the bills of births and deaths. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

7. Obedient regard.
Having had such experience of his fidelity and obsequies abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him. Warton.

18 L

OBS

Love rigid honesty
And strict observance of impartial laws. Recommen.
OBSERVANT. adj. [observant, Latin.]

1. Attentive; diligent; watchful.
These writers, which gave themselves to follow and imitate others, were observant spectators of those matters they admired. Raleigh's History of the World.
Wandering from clime to clime observant stray'd,
Their manners noted, and their states survey'd. Pope.

2. Obedient; respectful.
We are told how observant Alexander was of his master Aristotle. Digby on the Soul, Dedicate.

3. Respectfully attentive.
She now observant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm sun-set of thy various day. Pope.

4. Meanly dutiful; submissive.
How could the most base men attain to honour but by such an observant slavish course. Raleigh.

OBSERVANT. n. f. [This word has the accent on the first syllable in Shakespeare.] A slavish attendant. Not in use.

These kind of knaves in this plainness,
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty filly ducking observants
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

OBSERVATION. n. f. [observatio, from observe, Lat. observatio, Fr.]

1. The act of observing, noting, or remarking.
These cannot be infused by observation, because they are the rules by which men take their first apprehensions and observations of things; as the being of the rule must be before its application to the thing directed by it. South's Sermon.

The rules of our practice are taken from the conduct of such persons as fall within our observation. Regier.

2. Notion gained by observing; note; remark; animadversion.
In matters of human prudence, we shall find the greatest advantage by making wise observations on our conduct, and of the events attending it. Watt's Logic.

OBSERVATOR. n. f. [observator, Fr. from observe, Lat.] One that observes; a remarker.

The observator of the bills of mortality, hath given us the best account of the number that late plagues have swept away. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

She may be handsome, yet be chaste, you say,—
Good observator, not so fast away. Dryden.

OBSERVATORY. n. f. [observatoire, French.] A place built for astronomical observations.

Another was found near the observatory in Greenwich Park. Woodward on Fossils.

To OBSERVE. v. a. [observare, Fr. observe, Latin.]

1. To watch; to regard attentively.
Remember, that as thine eye observes others, so art thou observed by angels and by men. Taylor.

2. To find by attention; to note.
If our idea of infinity be got from the power we observe in ourselves, of repeating without end our own ideas, it may be demanded why we do not attribute infinity to other ideas, as well as these of space and duration. Locke.

One may observe them discourse and reason pretty well, of several other things, before they can tell twenty. Locke.

3. To regard or keep religiously.
A night to be much observed unto the Lord, for bringing them out of Egypt. Ex. xii. 42.

4. To obey; to follow.
To OBSERVE. v. n.

1. To be attentive.
Observing men may form many judgments by the rules of similitude and proportion, where causes and effects are not entirely the same. Watt's Logic.

2. To make a remark.
Wherever I have found her notes to be wholly another's, which is the case in some hundreds, I have barely quoted the true proprietor, without observing upon it. Pope's Lett.

OBSERVER. n. f. [from observe.]

1. One who looks vigilantly on persons and things; close remaker.
He reads much;
He is a great observer; and he looks Quite thro' the deeds of men. Shakespeare, Jul. Caesar.

Angelo,
There is a kind of character in thy life,
That to thy observer doth thy history
Fully unfold. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Careful observers may forest the hour,
By sure prognostics when to dread a show'r. Swift.

2. One who looks on; the beholder.
If a slow pac'd star had stol'n away,
From the observer's marking, he might stay
Three hundred years to see't again. Dome.

Company, he thinks, lessens the flame of vice, by sharing it; and therefore, if he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it at least by a multiplicity of objects. South's Sermons.

OBS

3. One who keeps any law or custom of practice.
Many nations are superstitious, and diligent observers of old customs, which they receive by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles. Spenser on Ireland.

The king after the victory, as one that had been bred under a devout mother, and was in his nature a great observer of religious forms, caused Te Deum to be solemnly sung in the presence of the whole army upon the place. Prin.

He was so strict an observer of his word, that no consideration whatever could make him break it. Prin.

Himself often read useful discourses to his servants on the Lord's day, of which he was always a very strict and solemn observer. Atterbury's Sermon.

The year, without regard to days, ends with an odd day and odd hours, odd minutes and odd seconds of minutes; so that it cannot be measured by any even number of days, hours, or minutes. Holder on Time.

3. Particular; uncouth; extraordinary; not like others; not to be numbered among any class. In a sense of contempt or dislike.

Her madnes hath the oddest frame of sense,
Such a dependency of thing on things,
As e'er I heard in madnes. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white,
To make up my delight,
No odd becoming graces.

Black eyes, or little know not what's in faces. Swelling.

This blue colour being made by nothing else than by reflexion of a specular superficies, seems so odd a phenomenon and so difficult to be explained by the vulgar hypothesis of philosophers, that I could not but think it deserved to be taken notice of. Newt. Opt.

When I broke loose from writers who have employed their wit and parts in propagating of vice, I did not question but I should be treated as an odd kind of a fellow. Spectator.

No fool Pythagoras was thought;
He made his lifting scholars stand;
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand:
Else, may be, some odd thinking youth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the music of the spheres. Prior.

So proud I am no slave,
So impudent I own myself no knave,
So odd, my country's ruin makes me grave. Pope.

4. Not noted; not taken into the common account; unheeded.

I left him cooling of the air with sighs, Shakespeare, Tempest.

In an odd angle of the file.

There are yet missing some few odd lads that you remember not. Shakespeare's Tempest.

5. Strange; unaccountable; fantastical.

How strange or odd see'er I bear myself,
As I, perchance, hereafter shall think meet,
To put an antic disposition on. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

It is an odd way of uniting parties to deprive a majority of part of their ancient right, by conferring it on a faction, who had never any right at all. Swift.

Patients have sometimes coveted odd things which have relieved them; as salt and vinegar. Arbutn. on Alimentis.

6. Uncommon; particular.

The odd man to perform all three perfectly is, Joannes Sturmius. Afham's Schoolmaster.

7. Unlucky.

The trust Othello puts him in,
On some odd time of his infirmity,
Will shake this island. Shakespeare, Othello.

Her awkward love indeed was oddly fated;
She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.

As masters in the clare obscure,
With various light your eyes allure:
A flaming yellow here they spread;
Draw off in blue, or charge in red;
Yet from these colours oddly mix'd,
Your light upon the whole is fix'd. Prior.

They had seen a great black substance lying on the ground very oddly-shaped.

Fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped, according to the modification of their constituent salts, or the cavities they are formed in. Gulliv. Trav.

Oddness. n. f. [from odd.]

1. The state of being not even.

2. Strangeness; particularly; uncouthness.

Coveting to recommend himself to posterity, Cicero begged it as an alms of the historians, to remember his consulship; and observe the oddness of the event; all their histories are left, and the vanity of his request stands recorded in his own writings. Dryden's Aurengzebe, Pref.

A knave is apprehensive of being discovered; and this habitual concern puts an oddness into his looks. Collier.

My wife fell into a violent disorder, and I was a little discomposed at the oddness of the accident. Swift.

I can't speak
Any beginning to this peevish odds. Shakespeare, Othello.

What is the night?
Almost at odds with the morning, which is which. Shak.

He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds. Shakespeare, King Lear.

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three;
Until the goose came out of door,
And staid the odds by adding four. Sha. L. Lab. Lost.

Gods of whatso'er degree,
Refuse not what themselves have given,
Or any brother God in heav'n;
Which keeps the peace among the Gods,
Or they must always be at odds. Swift's Miscell.

Ode. n. f. [ὕμνος.] A poem written to be sung to music; a lyric poem; the ode is either of the greater or less kind.

The less is characterized by sweetness and ease; the greater by sublimity, rapture, and quickness of transition.

A man haunts the forest that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakespeare, As you like it.

O run, prevent them with thy humble ode,
And lay it lowly at his blessed feet. Milt. Poems.

What work among you scholar Gods!
Phœbus must write him am'rous odes;
And thou, poor cousin, must compose
His letters in submissive prose. Prior.

O'dible. adj. [from odi.] Hateful.

O'dious. adj. [odiosus, Fr. odiosus, Latin.]

1. Hateful; detestable; abominable.

For ever all goodness will be most charming; for ever all wickedness will be most odious. Sprat's Sermon.

Hatred is the passion of defence, and there is a kind of hostility included in its very essence. But then, if there could have been hatred in the world, when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the compass of its proper object. South's Sermon.

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence
Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince;
Expel from Italy that odious name. Dryden.

She breathes the odious fume
Of nauseous steams, and poisons all the room. Granov.

2. Exposed to hate.

Another means for raising money, was, by inquiring after offences of officers in great place, who as by unjust dealing they became most odious, so by justice in their punishments the prince acquired both love and applause. Hayward.

He had rendered himself odious to the parliament. Clarend.

3. Causing hate; incitious.

The seventh from thee,
The only righteous in a world perverse,
And therefore hated, therefore to be set
With foes, for daring single to be just,
And utter odious truth, that God would come
To judge them with his saints. Milton's Par. Lost.

O'diously. adv. [from odious.]

1. Hatefully; abominably.

2. The state of being hated.
There was left of the blood royal, an aged gentleman of approved goodness, who had gotten nothing by his cousin's power but danger from him, and ediousness for him. Sidney.
EDIOUS. n. f. [Latin.] Invidiousness; quality of provoking hate.
The edious and offences which some men's rigour or remissness had contracted upon my government, I was resolved to have expiated. King Charles.

OFFENCE. n. f. [offense, Fr. offense, from offendo, Lat.]

1. Crime; act of wickedness.
Thither with speed their hasty course they ply'd,
Where Christ the Lord for offences dy'd. Paisfax.
Thou hast stol'n that, which after some few hours
Were thine without offence. Shakep. Henry IV.
2. A transgression.
If, by the law of nature, every man hath not a power to punish offences against it, I see not how the magistrates of any community can punish an alien of another country. Locke.
3. Injury.
I have given my opinion against the authority of two great men, but I hope without offence to their memories; for I loved them living, and reverence them dead. Dryden.
4. Displeasure given; cause of disgust; scandal.
Giving no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed. 2 Cor. vi. 3.
He remembered the injury of the children of Bean, who had been a snare and an offence unto the people. 1 Mac. iv.
The pleasures of the touch are greater than those of the other senses; as in warming upon cold, or refrigeration upon heat: for as the pains of the touch are greater than the offences of other senses, so likewise are the pleasures. Bacon.
5. Anger; displeasure conceived.
Earnest in every present humour, and making himself brave in his liking, he was content to give them just cause of offence when they had power to make just revenge. Sidney.
6. Attack; act of the assailant.
Courtesy that seemed incorporated in his heart, would not be persuaded to offer any offence, but only to stand upon the best defensive guard. Sidney.

OFFENSIVE. adj. [offense and full.] Injurious; giving displeasure.

1. It seems your most offensive act
Was mutually committed. Shakep. Measure for Measure.
2. OFFENSIVE. adj. [from offense.] Unoffending; innocent.
You are but now cast in his mood, a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his offence-less dog to frighten an imperious lion. Shakep. Othello.

TO OFFEND. v. a. [offendo, Latin.]

1. To make angry.
If much you note him
You shall offend him, and extend his passion, Feed and regard him not. Shakep. Macbeth.
Three sorts of men my soul hateth, and I am greatly offended at their life. Eccles. xxv. 2.
2. To offend; to attack.
The emperor himself came running to the place in his armour, severely reproving them of cowardice who had forsaken the place, and grievously offended with them who had kept such negligent watch. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
3. To offend; to violate.
He was fain to defend himself, and withal so to offend him, that by an unlucky blow the poor Philoxenus fell dead at his feet. Sidney.
4. To injure.
Cheerily you sin, and punish crimes with ease,
Not as th' offenders, but th' offenders' plea. Dryden.

TO OFFEND. v. n.

1. To be criminal; to transgress the law.
This man that of earthly matter maketh graven images, knoweth himself to offend above all others. Wisd. xiv. 13.
Whoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. James ii. 10.
2. To offend; to attack.
I shall offend, either to detain or give it. Shakep. Lear.
3. To offend; to violate.
Our language is extremely imperfect, and in many instances it offends against every part of grammar. Swift.

OFFENDER. n. f. [from offend.]

1. A criminal; one who has committed a crime; a transgressor;
a guilty person.
All that watch for iniquity are cut off, that make a man an offender for a word. Is. xxxix. 21.
So like a fly the poor offender dies;
But like the wasp, the rich escapes and flies. Denham.
How shall I lose the sin, yet keep the sense,
And love th' offender, yet detest th' offence?
The conscience of the offender shall be sharper than an avenger's sword. Clarissa.
2. One who has done an injury.
All vengeance comes too short,
Which can pursue th' offender. Shakep. King Lear.

OFFENDERS. n. f. [from offender.] A woman that offends.

1. Virginity murders itself, and should be buried in highways out of all sanctified limits, as a desperate offenders against nature. Shakep. All's well that ends well.
2. OFFENSIVE. adj. [offensive, Fr. offensus, Lat.]

OFFENSIVE. adj. [offensive, Fr. offensus, Lat.]

1. Causing anger; displeasing; disgusting.
Since no man can do ill with a good conscience, the consolation which we herein seem to find is but a meer deceitful

OFF

pleasing of ourselves in error, which at the length must needs turn to our greater grief, if that which we do to please God moist, be for the manifold defects thereof offensive unto him.It shall suffice, to touch such customs of the Irish as seem offensive and repugnant to the good government of the realm.2. Causing pain; injurious.
It is an excellent opener for the liver, but offensive to the stomach. *Bacon's Nat. Hist.*Some particular acrimony in the stomach sometimes makes it offensive, and which custom at last will overcome. *Arbuth.*3. Assailant; not defensive.
He recounted the benefits and favours that he had done him, in provoking a mighty and opulent king by an offensive war in his quarrel. *Bacon.*We enquire concerning the advantages and disadvantages betwixt those military offensive engines used among the ancients, and those of these latter ages. *William.*OFFENSIVELY. adv. [from offensive.]

1. Mischievously; injuriously.
In the least thing done offensively against the good of men, whose benefit we ought to seek for as our own, we plainly show that we do not acknowledge God to be such as indeed he is. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.
2. So as to cause uneasiness or displeasure.
A lady had her sight disordered, for that the images in her hangings did appear to her, if the room were not extensi-bly darkened, embellished with several offensively vivid colours. Boyle on Colours.
3. By way of attack; not defensively.

OFFENSIVENESS. n. f. [from offensive.]

1. Injuriousness; mischief.
2. Cause of disgust.
The muscles of the body, being preserved sound and limber upon the bones, all the motions of the parts might be explicated with the greatest ease and without any offensiveness.
Greav's Musclem.

TO OFFER. v. a. [offerre, Lat. offerre, Fr.]

1. To present to any one; to exhibit any thing so as that it may be taken or received.
The heathen women under the Mogul, offer themselves to the flames at the death of their husbands. Collins.
Some ideas forwardly offer themselves to all mens understandings; some sort of truths result from any idea, as soon as the mind puts them into propositions. Locke.
2. To sacrifice; to immolate; to present as an act of worship.
Servants placing happiness in strong drink, make court to my young master, by offering him that which they love. Loki.
They offered unto the Lord of the spoil which they had brought, seven hundred oxen. 2 Chron. xv. 11.
He shall offer of it all the fat thereof. Lev. vii. 3.
An holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices. 1 Pet. ii. 5.
Whole herds of offer'd bulls about the fire,
And bristled boars and woolly sheep expire. Dryden.
When a man is called upon to offer up himself to his conscience, and to resign justice and truth, he should be so far from avoiding the lists, that he should rather enter with inclination, and thank God for the honour. Cellier.
3. To bid, as a price or reward.
Nor shouldst thou offer all thy little stores,
Will rich Idols yield, but offer more. Dryden.
4. To attempt; to commence.
Lyfimachus armed about three thousand men, and began first to offer violence. 2 Mac. iv. 40.
5. To propose.
In all that great extent wherein the mind wanders in remote speculations, it first not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered for its contemplation.
Locke.

Our author offers no reason.

TO OFFER. v. n.

1. To be present; to be at hand; to present itself.
No thought can imagine a greater heart to see and contend danger, where danger would offer to make any wrongful threatening upon him. Sidney, b. ii.
Th' occasion offers, and the youth complies. Dryden.
2. To make an attempt.
We came close to the shore, and offered to land. Bacon.
One offers, and in offering makes a stay;
Another forward sets, and doth no more. Dan. Civ. War.
I would treat the pope and his cardinals roughly, if they offered to see my wife without my leave. Dryden.
3. With at.
I will not offer at that I cannot master. Bacon.
I hope they will take it well that I should offer at a new thing, and could forbear presuming to meddle where any of the learned pens have ever touched before. Gravatt.
Write down and make signs to him to pronounce them, and guide him by shewing him by the motion of your own lips.

OFF

lips to offer at one of those letters; which being the easiest, he will stumble upon one of them. *Holder.*The masquerade succeeded so well with him, that he would be offering at the shepherd's voice and call too. *L'Estrange.*It contains the grounds of his doctrine, and offers at somewhat towards the disproof of mine. *Atterbury.*Without offering at any other remedy, we hastily engaged in a war, which hath cost us sixty millions. *Swift.*OFFER. n. f. [offerre, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Proposal of advantage to another.
Some nymphs there are, too conscious of their face;
These swell their prospects, and exalt their pride,
When offers are disdain'd, and love deny'd. Pope.
2. First advance.
Force compels this offer,
And it proceeds from policy, not love. —
Mowbray, you overween to take it so:
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear. Shakep.
That shall not be my offer, not thy asking? Shakep.

3. Proposal made.

Th' offer he doth make,
Were not for him to give, nor them to take. Daniel.
I enjoined all the ladies to tell the company, in case they had been in the siege and had the same offer made them as the good women of that place, what every one of them would have brought off with her, and have thought most worth the faving. *Addison's Spectator.*It carries too great an imputation of ignorance, or folly, to quit and renounce former tenets upon the offer of an argument which cannot immediately be answered. Locke.

4. Price bid; act of bidding a price.

When stock is high, they come between,
Making by second hand their offers;
Then cunningly retire unseen,
With each a million in his coffers. Swift.

5. Attempt; endeavour.

Many motions, though they be unprofitable to expel that which hurteth, yet they are offers of nature, and cause motions by consent; as in groaning, or crying upon pain. *Bacon.*It is in the power of every one to make some essay, some offer and attempt, so as to show that the heart is not idle or insensible, but that it is full and big, and knows itself to be so, though it wants strength to bring forth. *Saunders's Sermon.*One sees in it a kind of offer at modern architecture, but at the same time that the architect has shown his dislike of the gothic manner, one may see that they were not arrived at the knowledge of the true way. Addison on Italy.

6. Something given by way of acknowledgment.

Fair streams that do vouchsafe in your clearness to represent unto me my blubbered face, let the tribute offer of my tears procure your stay a while with me, that I may begin yet at last to find something that pities me. *Sidney, b. ii.*OFFERER. n. f. [from offer.]

1. One who makes an offer.
2. One who sacrifices, or dedicates in worship.
If the mind of the offerer be good, this is the only thing
God respecteth. Hooker, b. v. f. 34.
When he commanded Abraham to sacrifice Isaac, the place of the offering was not left undetermined, and to the offerer's discretion. Saunders's Sermons.

OFFERING. n. f. [from offer.] A sacrifice; any thing immolated, or offered in worship.Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast. *Shakep.*They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd Than spotted livers in the sacrifice. *Shakep.*When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his feed. *Is. liii. 10.*The gloomy god Stood mute with awe, to see the golden rod;
Admir'd the destin'd offering to his queen,
A venerable gift so rarely seen. *Dryden.*What nation now to Juno's pow'r will pray,
Or offerings on my lighted altars lay?
I'll favour her,
That my awaken'd soul may take her flight,
Renew'd in all her strength, and fresh with life,
An offering fit for heaven. *Addison's Cato.*OFFERTORY. n. f. [offertorium, Fr.] The thing offered; the act of offering.He went into St. Paul's church, where he made offertory of his standards, and had orisons and Te Deum sung. *Bacon.*OFFERTURE. n. f. [from offer.] Offer; proposal of kindness.

A word not in use.

Thou hast prevented us with offertures of thy love, even when we were thine enemies. *King Charles.*OFFICE. n. f. [office, Fr. officium, Latin.]

1. A public charge or employment.
You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all reason'd office, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shakep. Coriolanus.

OFF

Methought this staff, mine office-badge in court;
Was broke in twain. Shakep. Henry VI. p. ii.

The insolence of office.

2. Agency; peculiar use.
All things that you should use to do me wrong, Deny their office. *Shakep. King Lear.*In this experiment the several intervals of the teeth of the comb do the office of so many prisms, every interval producing the phenomenon of one prism. Newt, Opt.

3. Business; particular employment.

The sun was sunk, and after him the star
Of Hesperus, whose office is to bring Twilight upon the earth. Milt. Par. Lys. b. ix.

4. Act of good or ill voluntarily tendered.

Wolves and bears
Casting their savageness aside, have done
Like offices of pity. Shakep. Winter's Tale.
Mrs. Ford, I see you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth; not only in the simple office of love, but in all the accompaniment, complement, and ceremony of it. *Shakep. Merry W. of Windsor.*I would I could do a good office between you. Shakep.

The wolf took this occasion to do the fox a good office.

You who your pious offices employ
To save the reliques of abandon'd Troy: Dryd. Virg.

5. Act of worship.

This gate
Instructs you how to adore the heavens, and bows you
To morning's holy office. Shakep. Cymbeline.

6. Formulary of devotions.

Whoever hath children or servants; let him take care that they say their prayers before they begin their work: the Lord's prayer, the ten commandments, and the creed, is a very good office for them, if they are not fitted for more regular offices. Taylor's Devotion.

7. Rooms in a house appropriated to particular business.

What do we but draw anew the model
In fewer offices? at least deficit
To build at all. Shakep. Henry IV. p. ii.
Let officers stand at distance, with some low galleries to pass from them to the palace itself. *Bacon.*8. Place where business is transacted. [Officina, Lat.]What shall good old York see thee, But empty lodgings and unfurnish'd walls, Unpeopled offices, untrod stones? Sho. Rich. II.
Empton and Dudley, though they could not but hear of these scruples in the king's conscience, yet as if the king's soul and his money were in several offices, that the one was not to intermeddle with the other, went on with as great rage as ever. *Bacon's Henry VII.*TO OFFICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to discharge; to do.I will be gone, altho'
The air of Paradise did fan the house,
And angels offic'd all. *Sho. All's well that ends well.*OFFICER. n. f. [officer, French.]

1. A man employed by the publick.

'Tis an office of great worth,
And you an officer fit for the place. *Shakep.*Submit you to the people's voices, Allow their officers, and be content To suffer lawful censure. *Shakep. Coriolanus.*The next morning there came to us the same officer that came to us at first to conduct us to the stranger's house. *Bac.*If it should fall into the French hands, all the princes would return to be the several officers of his court. *Temple.*As a magistrate or great officer he locks himself up from all approaches. *Saunders's Sermons.*Birds of prey are an emblem of rapacious officers. A fuperior power takes away by violence from them, that which by violence they took away from others. L'Estrange.

2. A commander in the army.

If he did not nimble ply the spade,
His tury officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back.
I summon'd all my officers in haste,
All came resolv'd to die in my defence. Dryden.
The bad disposition he made in my defence, him not only to be much inferior to Pompey as a sea officer, but to have had little or no skill in that element. Abb.

3. One who has the power of apprehending criminals.

The thieves are possess'd with fear
So strongly, that they dare not meet each other;
Each takes his fellow for an officer. Shakep. Henry IV.
We charge you
To go with us unto the officers. *Shakep. Henry VI.*OFFICERED. adj. [from officer.] Commanded; supplied with OFFICIAL.

OFF

OFFICIAL, adj. [official, Fr. from officius.]

1. Conductive; appropriate with regard to their use.
In this animal are the guts, the stomach, and other parts official unto nutrition, which, were its aliment the empty reception of air, their provisions had been superfluous. Brown.
2. Pertaining to a public charge.

The tribunes
Endue you with the people's voice. Remains
That in th' official marks invested, you Anon do meet the senate. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

OFFICIAL, n. f.
Official is that person to whom the cognizance of causes is committed by such as have ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Ayl.
A poor man found a priest over familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad and could not prove it, the priest sued him before the bishop's official for defamation. Camden.

OFFICIALTY, n. f. [officiality, Fr. from official.] The charge or post of an official.
The office of an official to an archdeacon. Ayliffe.

TO OFFICIATE, v. a. [from officius.] To give, in consequence of office.

All her number'd stars that seem to rowl Spaces incomprehensible, for such
Their distance argues, and their swift return
Diurnal, merely to officiate light Round this opacous earth, this punctual spot. Milton.

TO OFFICIATE, v. n.

1. To discharge an office, commonly in worship.
No minister officiating in the church, can with a good conscience omit any part of that which is commanded by the aforesaid law. Sanderfon.

Who of the bishops or priests that officiate at the altar, in the places of their sepulchres, ever said we offer to thee Peter or Paul?
To prove curates no servants, is to rescue them from that contempt which they will certainly fall into under this notion; which considering the number of persons officiating this way, must be very prejudicial to religion. Collier.

2. To perform an office for another.

OFFICIAL, adj. [from officius, a shop.] Used in a shop, or belonging to it: thus official plants and drugs are those used in the shops.

OFFICIOUS, adj. [efficient, Fr. efficius, Lat.]

1. Kind; doing good offices.
Yet, not to earth are those bright luminaries Officious; but to thee, earth's habitant. Milt. P. Lost.

2. Importunely forward.
You are too officious
In her behalf that scorns your services. Shaksp.
At Taunton they killed in fury an officious and eager commissioner for the subsidy. Bacon's Henry VII.

Cato, perhaps
I'm too officious, but my forward cares
Would fain preserve a life of so much value. Addison.

OFFICIOUSLY, adv. [from officius.]

1. Importunely forward.
The most corrupt are most obsequious grown,
And those they scorn'd, officiously they own. Dryden.

2. Kindly; with unasked kindness.
To give themselves, not you, an happy year. Dryd.

Let thy roasts officiously be nurs'd,
And led to living streams to quench their thirst. Dryd.

OFFICIOUSNESS, n. f. [from officius.]

1. Forwardness of civility, or respect, or endeavour. Commonly in an ill sense.
I shew my officiousness by an offering, though I betray my poverty by the measure. Saath's Serm.

2. Service.
In whom is required understanding as in a man, courage and vivacity as in a lion, service and ministerial officiousness as in the ox, and expedition as in the eagle. Brown's V. Err.

OFFING, n. f. [from off.] The act of steering to a distance from the land.

OFFSET, n. f. [off and set.] Sprout; shoot of a plant.
They are multiplied not only by the seed, but many also by the roots, producing offsets or creeping under ground. Ray.

Some plants are raised from any part of the root, others by offsets, and in others the branches set in the ground will take root. Locke.

OFFSCOURING, n. f. [off and scour.] Recrement; part rubbed away in cleaning any thing.

Thou hast made us as the offscouring and refuse in the midst of the people. Lam. iii. 45.

OFFSPRING, n. f. [off and spring.]

1. Propagation; generation.
All things coveting to be like unto God in being ever, that which cannot hereunto attain personally, doth seem to continue itself by offspring and propagation. Hobbes.

2. The thing propagated or generated; children; descendants.

OGL

When the fountain of mankind
Did draw corruption, and God's curse, by sin;
This was a charge, that all his heirs did bind,
And all his offspring grew corrupt therein. Devlin.

To the Gods alone
Our future offspring, and our wives are known. Dryd.
His principal actor is the son of a goddess, not to mention the offspring of other deities. Addison's Spectator.

3. Production of any kind.
Tho' both fell before their hour,
Time on their offspring hath no pow'r;
Nor fire nor fate their bays shall blast,
Nor death's dark veil their days o'ercast. Denham.

TO OFFUSCATE, v. a. [offusco, Lat. offusquer, Fr.] To dim; to cloud; to darken.

OFFUSCATION, n. f. [from offusco.] The act of darkening.

OFFT, adv. [oft, Saxon.] Often; frequently; not rarely; not seldom.

In labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. 2 Cor. ii. 23.

It may be a true faith, for so much as it is; it is one part of true faith, which is oft mistaken for the whole. Hamm.

Favours to none, to all the smiles extends.
Oft she rejects, but never once offends. Po. Rn. Locke.

OFFTEN, adv. [from oft, Saxon; in the comparative, often, superlative, oftneft.] Oft; frequently; many times; not seldom.

The queen that bore thee,
Offen upon her knees than on her feet,
Died ev'ry day the liv'd. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities. 1 Tim. v. 23.

In journeying often, in perils in the wilderness. 2 Cor. ii. 20.

Who does not more admire Cicero as an author, than as a consul of Rome, and does not often talk of the celebrated writers of our own country in former ages, than of any among their contemporaries? Addison's Freeholder.

OFFTENT, adv. [often and times.] From the composition of this word it is reasonable to believe, that oft was once an adjective, of which often was the plural; which seems retained in the phrase thine often infirmities. See OFFTEN.

Frequently; many times; often.

Is our faith in the blessed trinity a matter needless, to be oftentimes mentioned and opened in the principal part of that duty which we owe to God, our public prayer? Hobbes.

The difficulty was by what means they could ever arrive to places oftentimes so remote from the ocean. Wadsworth.

It is equally necessary that there should be a future state, to vindicate the justice of God, and solve the present irregularities of providence, whether the best men be oftentimes only, or always the most miserable. Attorney.

OFFTIMES, adv. [oft and times.] Frequently; often.

Offtimes nothing profits more Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
Well managed. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. vii.

Offtimes before I hither did resort,
Charm'd with the conversation of a man
Who led a rural life. Dryden and Lee.

OGEE, n. f. Is a sort of moulding in architecture, consisting of a round and a hollow: it is almost in the form of an S, and is the same with what Vitruvius calls cima. Cima revera, is an ogee with the hollow downwards. Harris.

TO OGLE, v. a. [oggh, an eye, Dutch.] To view with idle glances, as in fondness; or with a design not to be heeded.

From their high scaffold with a trumpet cheer,
And ogling all their audience, then they speak. Dryden.

If the female tongue will be in motion, why should it not be set to go right? Could they talk of the different aspects and conjunctions of the planets, they need not be at the pains to comment upon ogles and clandestine marriages. Addison's Guardian, No. 155.

Whom is he ogling yonder? himself in his looking-glass. Martinus Scribleri.

OGLER, n. f. [oggheler, Dutch.] A fly gazer; one who views by side glances.

Upon the distile of the neck-piece, the whole tribe of ogles stared the fair sex in the neck rather than in the face. Addison's Guardian, No. 100.

Jack was a prodigious ogler; he would ogle you the outside of his eye inward, and the white upward. J. Bull.

OGLIO, n. f. [from oglio, Spanish.] A dish made by mingling different kinds of meat; a medley; a hotchpotch.

These general motives of the common good, I will not so much as once offer up to your lordship, though they have still the upper end; yet, like great oglio's, they rather make a shew than provoke appetite. Suckling.

Where there is such an oglio or medley of various opinions in the world again, as those men entertain in their service without any scruple as to the diversity of their sects and opinions. King Charles.

OIL

He that keeps an open house, should consider that there are oglio's & guests, as well as of dishes, and that the liberty of a common table is as good as a tacit invitation to all sorts of intruders. L'Estrange.
OH, interj. An exclamation denoting pain, sorrow, or surprise.

He,
Like still acorn'd boar, a churning on; Shaksp. Cymbeline.
Cry'd oh! and mounted. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
Oh m! all the horie have got over the river, what shall we do? Walton's Angler.

My eyes confest it;
My very action speaks my heart aloud;
Hush, the madness of my high attempt Speaks louder yet! Dryden's Spanish Friar.

OIL, n. [oel, Saxon; oleum, Latin.]

1. The juice of olives expressed.
Bog pure oil olive beaten for the light. Ex. xxvii. 20.

2. Anfat, greatly, unctuous, thin matter.
Imost birds there is only one gland; in which are diversells, ending in two or three larger cells, lying under the tipple of the oil bag. Derham's Physico-Theol.

3. Tl juices of certain vegetables, expressed or drawn by the still without fermentation, or after the spirit.

It with chemists called sulphur, is the second of their hypothetical, and of the true five chymical principles. It is an immemorable, unctuous, subtle substance, which usually rises off the spirit. The chemists attribute to this principle all diversity of colours, and all the beauty and deformity.

It sweetens the acrimony of salts, and by stopping or filling the pores of a mixt body, keeps it longer from corruption, where it abounds. There are two sorts of oil which fm to be mixt with spirit; for it can never be drawn pure, d which will swim upon water, such as oil of aniseed and yender, which the chemists call essential, and is commonly tawn in a limbeck with store of water; and another kind which probably is mixt with salts; and these will sink in water, such as the oil of guaiacum and cloves. Harris.

After this expressed oil, we made trial of a distilled one; and for that purpose made choice of the common oil or spirit. Boyle.

OIL, v. a. [from the noun.] To smear or lubricate with oil.

The men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain oiled. Watson.

Amber will attract straws thus oiled, it will convert the needles of dials, made either of brass or iron, although they be much oiled, for in those needles confining free upon their center there can be no adhesion. Brown's V. Err.

Swift oiled many a spring which Harley moves. Swift.

OILCOLOUR, n. f. [oil and colour.] Colour made by grinding coloured substances in oil.

Oilcolours, after they are brought to their due temper, may be preserved long in some degree of softness, kept all the while under water. Boyle.

OILINESS, n. f. [from oily.] Unctuousness; greasiness; quality approaching to that of oil.

Basil hath fat and succulent leaves; which oiliness, if drawn forth by the sun, will make a very great change. Bacon.

Wine is inflammable; so as it hath a kind of oiliness. Bac.

Smoke from unctuous bodies and such whose oiliness is evident, he nameth nidor. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Chyle has the same principles as milk, viscosity from the caseous parts, an oiliness from the butyraceous parts, and an acidity from the tartareous. Flyer.

The flesh of animals which live upon other animals, is most antiacid; though offensive to the stomach sometimes by reason of their oiliness. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

OILMAN, n. f. [oil and man.] One who trades in oils and pickles.

OILSHOP, n. f. [oil and shop.] A shop where oils and pickles are sold.

OILY, adj. [from oil.]

1. Consisting of oil; containing oil; having the qualities of oil.
The like cloud, if it were oily or fatty, will not discharge; not because it sticketh faster, but because air preyeth upon water and flame, and fire upon oil. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Flame is grosser than gross fire, by reason of the mixture with it of that viscous oily matter, which, being drawn out of the wood and candle, serves for fuel. Digby.

Watry substances are more apt to putrify than oily. Bacon.

2. Fat; greatly.

This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's;
Go call him forth. Shaksp. Henry IV.

OILYGRAIN, n. f. A plant.

The flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves without any footstalk; the flower cup consists of one leaf, divided into five long slender segments; the flower is of one leaf in shape like those of the fox-glove; the pointal, which rises in the middle of the flower, afterward becomes an oblong four cornered pod, divided into four distinct cells, which are replete with elegant seeds. Millet.

OLD

OLYPALM, n. f.
It grows in great plenty on the coast of Guiney, as also in Cape Verd island, where it grows as high as the main mast of a ship. But these trees have been transplanted to Jamaica and Barbados, in both which places they thrive very well. The inhabitants make an oil from the pulp of the fruit, and draw a wine from the body of the trees, which inebriates; and with the rind of these trees they make mats to lie on. Miller.

TO OINT, v. a. [oint, French.] To anoint; to smear with something unctuous.

They oint their naked limbs with mother'd oil,
Or from the founts where living sulphurs boil,
They mix a medicine to foment their limbs. Dryden.

Limarus was not wanting to the war,
Directing ointed arrows from afar; Dryden's Æneis.

ORNTMENT, n. f. [from oint.] Unguent; unctuous matter to smear any thing.

Life and long health that gracious ointment gave,
And deadly wounds could heal, and rear again
The senseless corpse appointed for the grave. Fairy Q.

OKER, n. f. [See OCHRE.] A colour.

And Klaius taking for his younglings cark,
Left greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,
Buffy with oker did their shoulders mark. Sidney.

Red oker is one of the most heavy colours; yellow oker is not so, because it is clearer. Dryden's Disfranchisement.

OLD, adj. [eals, Saxon; alt, German.]

1. Past the middle part of life; not young.

Shall one day faint, and their swift motion stay;
And time itself, in time shall cease to move,
But the soul survives and lives for aye. Devin.

ONE. n. f. [There are many uses of the word one, which serve to denominate it a substantive, though some of them may seem rather to make it a pronoun relative, and some may perhaps

ONE

- perhaps be considered as consistent with the nature of an adjective.]
1. A single person.
If one by one you wedded all the world,
She you kill'd would be unparallel'd. Shakespeare.
Although the beauties, riches, honours, sciences, virtues,

Tillotson.
 10. [On, on, French. It is used sometimes a general or indefinite nominative for any man, any person. For one the English formerly used men; as, they live obscurely men know not how, or die obscurely, men mark not when. Ascham. For which it would now be said, one knows not how, one knows not when; or, it is not known how.] Any person; any man indefinitely.
It is not so worthy to be brought to heroic effects by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Aeneas, as by one's own choice or working. Sidney, b. ii.

 12. One has sometimes a plural, either when it stands for persons indefinitely; as, the great ones of the world: or when it relates to some thing going before, and is only the representative of the antecedent noun. This relative mode of speech, whether singular or plural, is in my ear not very elegant, yet is used by good authors.
Be not found here; hence with your little ones. Shakespeare.
These successes are more glorious which bring benefit to the world, than such ruinous ones as are dyed in human blood.
Glimville's Scip. Pref.

all things onerous to himself, as a punishment for his crime.
Ayliffe's Parergon.
ONION. n. f. [εἰσων, French.]
It hath an orbicular, coated, bulbous root; the leaves are hollow or pip; the stalk also hollow and swells out in the middle; the flowers consisting of six leaves are collected into a spherical head; the style of the flower becomes a roundish fruit divided into three cells, containing roundish seeds. Mill.
If the boy have not a woman's gift
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well. Shaw. Taming of the Shrew.
I am als, an onion-ey'd. Shaw. Ant. and Cleopatra.
This is ev'ry cook's opinion,
No fav'ry dith without an onion:
But left your kissing should be spoil'd,
Your onions must be thoroughly boil'd. Swift.
ON'LY. adj. [from one, only, or onely.]
1. Single; one and no more.
Of all whom fortune to my sword did bring,
This only man was worth the conquering. Dryden.
2. This and no other.
The logic now in use has long possessed the chair, as the only art taught in the schools for the direction of the mind in the study of the sciences. Locke.
3. This above all other: as, he is the only man for musick.
ON'LY. adv.
1. Simply; singly; merely; barely.
I propose my thoughts only as conjectures. Burnet.
The posterity of the wicked inherit the fruit of their father's vices; and that not only by a just judgment, but from the natural course of things. Tillotson, Sermon. 4.
All who deserve his love, he makes his own;
And to be lov'd himself, needs only to be known. Dryden.
Nor must this contrition be exercised by us, only for grosser evils; but when we live the best. Wake.
2. So and no otherwise.
Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, was only evil continually. Gen. vi. 5.
3. Singly without more: as, only begotten.
ONOMANCY. n. f. [ὀνομα and μαντία.] Divination by a name.
Destinies were superstitiously, by onomancy, deciphered out of names, as though the names and natures of men were futable, and fatal necessities concurred herein with voluntary motion. Comden.
ONOMANTICAL. adj. [ὀνομα and μαντικός.] Predicting by names.
Theodatus, when curious to know the success of his wars against the Romans, an onomantical or name-wizard Jew, willed

ONY

willed him to shut up a number of swine and give some of them Roman names, others Gothic names with several marks, and there to leave them. Camden.

ONSET. n. f. [from on and set.]
1. Attack; storm; assault; first brute.
As well the soldier dieth, which standeth still, as he that gives the bravest onset. Sidney, b. ii.

All breathless, weary, faint,
Him spying, with fresh onset he assail'd,
And kindling new his courage, seeming quaint,
Struck him so hugely, that through great contrainst
He made him stoop. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

The shout
Of battle now began, and rushing sound
Of onset. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
Sometimes it gains a point; and presently it finds itself baffled and beaten off; yet still it renews the onset, attacks the difficulty afresh; plants this reasoning and that argument, like so many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way into the obdurate enclosed truth. South.
Without men and provisions it is impossible to secure conquests that are made in the first onsets of an invasion. Addison.

The first impetuous onsets of his grief;
Use every artifice to keep him steadfast. Philips.
2. Something added by way of ornamental appendage. This sense, says Nicholson, is still retained in Northumberland, where onset means a tuft.

I will with deeds requite thy gentleness;
And for an onset, Titus, to advance
Thy name and honourable family, Lavinia will I make my empress. Shakespeare, Tit. And.
ONSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To set upon; to begin.
This for a while was hotly onsets and a reasonable price offered, but soon cooled again. Carew.
ONSLAUGHT. n. f. [from on and slay.] See SLAUGHTER. Attack; storm; onset.

They made a halt
To view the ground, and where t' assault,
Then call'd a council, which was best,
By siege or onslaught to invest.
The enemy; and 'twas agreed
By storm and onslaught to proceed. Hudibras, p. i.

ONTOLOGIST. n. f. [from ontology.] One who considers the affections of being in general; a metaphysician.
ONTOLOGY. n. f. [from ὄν and λογία.] The science of the affections of being in general; metaphysics.

The modes, accidents and relations that belong to various beings, are copiously treated of in metaphysics, or more properly ontology. Watts's Logick.

ONWARD. adv. [from on and ward, Saxon.]
1. Forward; progressively.

My lord,
When you went onward on this ended action,
I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye. Shakespeare.
Saturn was now at hand, and from his feat
The monster moving onward came as fast.
With horrid strides. Milton, Par. Lost, b. ii.
Him thro' the spicy forest onward come Adam discern'd, as in the door he sat
Of his cool bow'r. Milton, Paradise Lost, b. v.
Yet ne'er looks backward, onward still he goes, Pope.

2. In a state of advanced progression.
Philoxenus came to see how onward the fruits were of his friends labour. Sidney.
You are already so far onward of your way, that you have forsaken the imitation of ordinary converse. Dryden.

3. Somewhat farther.
A little onward lend thy guiding hand
To these dark steps, a little farther on. Milton.

ONYCHA. n. f. It is found in two different senses in scripture. — The odoriferous snail or shell, and the stone named onyx. The greatest part of commentators explain it by the onyx or odoriferous shell, like that of the shell-fish called purpura. The onyx is fitted for in watry places of the Indies, where grows the spicanardi, which is the food of this fish and what makes its shell so aromatick. Calmet.

Take sweet spices, onycha, and galbanum. Ex. xxx. 34.
ONYX. n. f. [from ὄνυξ.] The onyx is a semipellucid gem, of which there are several species, but the bluish white kind, with brown and white zones, is the true onyx legitima of the ancients. It is a very elegant and beautiful gem, and the regular arrangement and disposition of its colours make amends for their want of show. Hill's Mat. Med.

Nor are her rare endowments to be sold,
For glittering kind by Ophir shewn.
The blue-eyed fawn, or rich onyx stone. Samuel.
The onyx is an accidental variety of the agat kind: it is of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red: when on one or both sides the white, there happens to lie also a plate of a reddish or flesh colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonix. Woodward on Foss. wictuels, Saxon.

OPE

1. Soft mud; mire at the bottom of water; slime.
My son i' th' ooze is bedded. Shakespeare, Tempest.
Some carried up into their grounds the ooze or salt water mud, and found good profit thereby. Carew.

2. Soft flow; spring. This seems to be the meaning in Prior.
From his first fountain and beginning dozes,
Down to the sea each brook and torrent flows. Prior.

3. The liquor of a tanner's vat.
To Ooze. v. n. [from the noun.] To flow by stealth; to run gently; to drain away.
When the contracted limbs were cramp'd, even then
A wat'rish humour swell'd and ooz'd agen. Dryden.

Where creeping waters ooze,
Where marshes stagnate, and where rivers wind,
Cluster the rolling fogs. Thomson, Autumn.

The lilly drinks
The latent rill, scarce oozing thro' the grass. Thompson.
O'OOZE. adj. [from ooze.] Mirey; muddy; slimy.

Old father Thames rais'd up his rev'rend head,
To OPA'CE. v. a. [from opac, Lat.] To shade; to cloud; to darken; to obscure.

The same corpulence upon the unfolding of the glass, did opacate that part of the air they moved in.
OPA'CITY. n. f. [from opacitas, Fr. opaciter, Lat.] Cloudiness; want of transparency.

Can any thing escape the perspicacity of those eyes in whose optics there is no opacity? Brown.
Had there not been any night, shadow or opacity, we should never have had any determinate conceit of darkness. Glanv.
How much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit is it to transmit the species. Ray on the Creation.

The least parts of almost all natural bodies, are in some measure transparent, and the opacity of those bodies arises from the multitude of reflexions caused in their internal parts. Newt. Opt.

OPA'CIOUS. adj. [from opac, Latin.] Dark; obscure; not transparent.

When he perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal diffusion through the whole place that it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, and more subtle far than they, and consequently, divisible into lesser atoms; and having lesser pores, gives less scope to our eyes to miss light. Digby.
Upon the firm opacous globe
Of this round world, whose first convex divides
The luminous inferior orbs, inclos'd
From chaos, and th' inroad of darkness old, Satan alighted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

OPAL. n. f. The opal is a very elegant and a very singular kind of stone, it hardly comes within the rank of the pellucid gems, being much more opaque, and less hard. It is found always in the pebble shape of various sizes, from the head of a pin to the bigness of a walnut. It is naturally bright, smooth and glossy, and shows all its beauty without the help of the lapidary: in colour it much resembles the finest mother of pearl; its basis seeming a bluish or greyish white, but with a property of reflecting all the colours of the rainbow, as turned differently to the light, among which the green and the blue are particularly beautiful, but the fiery red is the finest of all. This stone is found in the East-Indies, in Egypt, Persia and Tartary, and in some parts of Europe, particularly in Bohemia; but the oriental is much the finest. Hill's Mat. Med.

Thy mind is a very opal. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.
Th' empyreal heav'n, extended wide
In circuit, undetermin'd square or round;
With opal tow'rs, and battlements adorn'd
Of living fapir. Milton, Par. Lost, b. ii.
We have this stone from Germany, and is the same with the opal of the ancients. Woodward on Foss.

OPA'QUE. adj. [from opac, Latin.]
They
Shot upward still direct, whence no way round Shadow from body opaque can fall. Milton, Par. Lost.
These disappearing fixt stars were actually extinguish'd and turned into more opaque and gross planet-like bodies. Chyene's Phil. Prin.

TO OPE. v. a. [from open, Saxon; op, Islandick, a hole. Ope To O'PEN. is used only in poetry, when one syllable is more convenient than two.]

1. To unclofe; to unlock; to put into such a state as that the inner parts may be seen or entered. The contrary to shut.
The

Before you fight, ope this letter. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

They consent to work us harm and woe, Fairfax.
To ope the gates, and so let in our foe.
If a man open a pit and not cover it, and an ox fall thereon, the owner of the pit shall make it good. Ex. xxi. 23.
Let us pass through your land, and none shall do you any hurt; howbeit they would not open unto him. 1 Mac. v. 48.
Open thy mouth for the dumb in the cause of all such as are appointed to destruction. Prov. xxxi. 8.
Open to me the gates of righteousness. Pf. cxviii. 19.
Adam, now ope thine eyes; and first behold
Th' effects which thy original crime hath wrought
In some to spring from thee. Milton, Par. Lost, b. xi.

Our fleet Apollo sends,
Where Tuscan Tyber rolls with rapid force, Dryden.
And where Numicus ope his holy source.
When first you ope your doors, and passing by The sad ill-omen'd object meets your eye. Dryden.
When the matter is made, the fide must be opened to let it out. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To show; to discover.
The English did adventure far for to open the north parts of America. Abbot's Description of the World.

3. To divide; to break.
The wall of the cathedral church was opened by an earthquake, and shut again by a second. Addison on Italy.

4. To explain; to disclose.
Some things wisdom openeth by the sacred books of scripture, some things by the glorious works of nature. Hooker.
Paul reasoned with them out of the scriptures, opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered and risen again from the dead. Acts xvii. 3.

After the earl of Lincoln was slain, the king opened himself to some of his council, that he was sorry for the earl's death, because by him he might have known the bottom of his danger. Bacon's Henry VII.
Gramont governor of Bayonne, took an exquisite notice of their persons and behaviour, and opened himself to some of his train, that he thought them to be gentlemen of much more worth than their habits bewrayed. Wotton.

A friend who relates his success, talks himself into a new pleasure; and by opening his misfortunes, leaves part of them behind him. Collier on Friendship.

5. To begin.
You retained him only for the opening of your cause, and your main lawyer is yet behind. Dryden, Ep. to the Whigs.
Homer opens his poem with the utmost simplicity and modesty, he continually grows upon the reader. Notes on Odyss.

TO OPE. v. n.
1. To unclofe itself; not to remain shut; not to continue closed.
The hundred doors
Ope of themselves; a rushing whirlwind roars
Within the cave. Dryden, Æn. vi.

My old wounds are open'd at this view,
And in my murd'rer's preference bleed anew. Dryden.
Unnumber'd treasures ope at once,
From each the nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddesses. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

2. To bark. A term of hunting.
If I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again.
The night restores our actions done by day;
As hounds in sleep will open for their prey. Dryden.
Cytheron loudly calls me to my way;
Thy hounds, Taygetus, open and pursue their prey. Dryden.
Hark! the dog opens, take thy certain aim;
The woodcock flutters. Gay's Rural Sports.

OPE. adj. [Ope is scarcely used but by old authors, and by O'PEN. them in the primitive not figurative sense.]
1. Unclofed; not shut.

The gates are ope; now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them;
Not for the fliers. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope
The lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life o' th' building. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Then sent Sanballat his servant, with an open letter in his hand. Neh. vi. 5.

With the same key fet ope the door
Wherewith you lock'd it fast before. Chasteland.
Thro' the gate,
Wide open and unguarded, Satan pass'd. Milton, P. Lost.

Where open acts accuse, th' excuse is vain. Sidney.

3. Not wearing disguise; clear; artless; sincere.
He was so secret therein, as not daring to be open, that to no creature he ever spake of it.
Lord Cordes, the hotter he was against the English in time of war, had the more credit in a negotiation of peace; and besides was held a man open and of good faith. Bacon.
The French are always open, familiar, and talkative; the Italians stiff, ceremonious, and reserved. Addison.
This reserved mysterious way of acting towards persons, who in right of their posts expected a more open treatment, was imputed to some hidden design. Swift.
His generous, open, undefining heart,
Has begg'd his rival to solicit for him. Addison's Cato.

4. Not clouded; clear.
With dry eyes, and with an open look,
She met his glance midway. Dryden's Boccaccio.
Then shall thy Craggs
On the cast ore another Pollio shine;
With aspect open shall erect his head. Pope.

5. Not hidden; exposed to view.
In that little spot of ground that lies between those two great oceans of eternity, we are to exercise our thoughts, and lay open the treasures of the divine wisdom and goodness hid in this part of nature and providence. Burnet.
These innate notions should lie open fairly to every one's view. Locke.
Moral principles require reasoning and discourse to discover the certainty of their truths: they lie not open as natural characters engraven on the mind. Locke.

6. Not restrained; not denied.
If Demetrius and the craftsmen have a matter against any man, the law is open and there are deputies; let them implead one another. Acts xix. 38.

To OPINE. v. n. [opinor, Latin.] To think; to judge; to be of opinion.

Fear is an ague, that forsakes And haunts by fits those whom it takes; And they'll opine they feel the pain

And blows they felt to-day, again. In matters of mere speculation, it is not much material to the welfare of government, or of themselves, whether they opine right or wrong, and whether they be philosophers or no.

But I, who think more highly of our kind; Opine, that nature, as in duty bound, Deep hid the shining mischief under ground.

1. Still in a preconceived notion. 2. Imagined; not proved.

It is the more difficult to find out truth, because it is in such inconsiderable proportions scattered in a mass of opinion uncertainties; like the silver in Hiero's crown of gold.

OPINATOR. n. f. [opiniator, French.] One fond of his own notion; inflexible; adherent to his own opinion.

What will not opinators and self-believing men dispute of and make doubt of?

Effix left lord Roberts governour; a man of a four and forty nature, a great opiniator, and one who must be overcome before he would believe that he could be so.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition; as it is pity but all such poltick opinators should.

OPINATRE. n. f. [French.] Obstinate; stubborn. Instead of an able man, you desire to have him an insignificant wrangler, opiniatre in discourse, and priding himself in contradicting others.

OPINATRETY. n. f. [opiniatreté, French.] Obstinate; inflexibility; determination of mind; stubbornness. This word, though it has been tried in different forms, is not yet received, nor is it wanted.

Let popular opiniatry should arise, we will deliver the chief opinions.

The one sets the thoughts upon wit and false colours, and not upon truth; the other teaches fallacy, wrangling and opiniatry.

So much as we ourselves consider and comprehend of truth and reason, so much we possess of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains, make us not one jot the more knowing, though they happen to be true: what in them was science, is in us but opiniatry.

I can pass by opiniatry and the busy meddling of those who thrust themselves into every thing.

I was extremely concerned at his opiniatry in leaving me; but he shall not get rid so.

OPINION. n. f. [opinion, Fr. opius, Lat.] 1. Persuasion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge. Opinion is a light, vain, crude and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination, but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason.

Opinion is, when the assent of the understanding is so far gained by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one persuasion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of uncertainty or doubting.

Still in opinion, ever in the wrong. Blest be the princes who have fought For pompous names, or wide dominion, Since by their error we are taught, That happiness is but opinion.

Can they make it out against the common sense and opinion of all mankind, that there is no such thing as a future state of misery for such as have lived ill here.

Charity itself commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all; but friendship, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning leirs, that where there are divers children the eldest son has the right to be heir.

Philosophers are of opinion, that infinite space is possessed by God's infinite omnipotence.

I shall conclude my paper with a story out of Boccacini, which sufficiently shews us the opinion that judicious author entertained of the sort of critics I have been here mentioning.

7. Favourable judgment. In actions of arms small matters are of great moment, especially when they serve to raise an opinion of commanders, especially when they serve to raise an opinion of commanders.

Howsoever I have no opinion of those things; yet so much I conceive to be true, that strong imagination hath more force upon things living, than things merely inanimate.

To OPINION. v. a. [from the noun.] To opine; to think. A word out of use, and unworthy of revival.

The stoicks opinioned the souls of wise men dwell about the moon, and those fools wandered about the earth: whereas the Epicureans held that death was nothing, nor after death.

That the soul and the angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, is generally opinioned. It is opinioned, that the earth rests as the world's centre, while the heavens are the subject of the universal motions.

OPO

OPINIONATIVE. adj. [from opinion.] Fond of preconceived notions; stubborn.

Striking at the root of pedantry and opinionative assurance; would be no hindrance to the world's improvement.

One would rather chuse a reader without art, than one ill instructed with learning, but opinionative and without judgment.

OPINIONATIVELY. adv. [from opinionative.] Stubbornly. OPINIONATIVENESS. n. f. [from opinionative.] Obstinate.

OPINIONIST. n. f. [opinioniste, Fr. from opinion.] One fond of his own notions.

Every conceited opinionist sets up an infallible chair in his own brain.

OPIPAROUS. adj. [opiparus, Lat.] Sumptuous.

OPITULATION. n. f. [opitulation, Lat.] An aiding; a helping.

OPIMUM. n. f. A juice, partly of the resinous, partly of the gummy kind. It is brought to us in flat cakes or masses; usually of a roundish figure, very heavy and of a dense texture, not perfectly dry: its colour is a dark brownish yellow; its smell is very unpleasant, of a dead faint kind; and its taste very bitter and very acid.

It is brought from Natolia, from Egypt, and from the East-Indies, where it is produced from the white garden poppy; a plant of which every part is full of a milky juice, and with which the fields of Asia-Minor are in many places sown as ours are with corn.

When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet soft, green and full of juice, incisions are made in them, and from every one of these a few drops flow of a milky juice, which soon hardens into a solid coiffence. These drops are gathered with great care, and the finest opium proceeds from the first incisions.

In the countries where opium is produced, multitude are employed in preparing it with water, honey and spices, and working it up into cakes; but what we generally have is the mere crude juice, or at most worked up with water, or a small quantity of honey sufficient to bring it into form.

The ancients were greatly divided about the virtues and use of opium; some calling it a poison, and others the greatest of all medicines. At present it is in high esteem, and externally applied it is emollient, relaxing and discutient, and greatly promotes suppuration.

A moderate dose of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet custom will make people bear a dram as a moderate dose; but in that case nature is violated. Its first effect is the making the patient cheerful, as if he had drank moderately of wine; it removes melancholy, excites boldness, and dissipates the dread of danger; and for this reason the Turks always take it when they are going to battle in a larger dose than ordinary: it afterward quiets the spirits, eases pain, and disposes to sleep.

After the effect of a dose of opium is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the spirits, which had been elevated by it, become lower than before, and the pulse languid. An immoderate dose of opium brings on a sort of drunkenness, cheerfulness and loud laughter, at first, and, after many terrible symptoms, death itself. Those who have accustomed themselves to an immoderate use of opium, are subject to relaxations and weaknesses of all the parts of the body; they are apt to be faint, idle and thoughtless, and are generally in a stupid and uncomfortable state, except just after they have taken a fresh dose: they lose their appetite, and in fine grow old before their time.

Sleep hath forsook and giv'n me o'er To death's benumbing opium as my only cure.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporific or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies.

OPLE-TREE. n. f. [opile and tree.] A sort of tree.

OPOBALSAMUM. n. f. [Latin.] Balm of Gilead.

OPOPONAX. n. f. [Latin.] A gum resin of a tolerably firm texture, in small loose granules, and sometimes in large masses, which are impure. It is of a strong disagreeable smell, and an acid and extremely bitter taste. It is brought to us from the East, and was well known to the Greeks; but we are entirely ignorant of the plant which produces this drug. It is attenuating and discutient, and gently purgative. Hill.

OPPIDAN. n. f. [oppidanus, Lat.] A townman; an inhabitant of a town.

To OPPUGNERATE. v. a. [oppugnare, Lat.] To pledge; to pawn.

OPILATION. n. f. [opilation, Fr. from opilate.] Obfuscation; matter heaped together.

The ingredients prescribed in their substance actuate the spirits, reclude opilation, and mundify the blood. Harvey.

O'PILATIVE. adj. [opilative, Fr.] Obfuscative.

OPPLET'D. adj. [oppletus, Lat.] Filled; crowded.

OPPO'NENT. adj. [opponens, Lat.] Opposite; adverse.

Ere the foundations of this earth were laid,
It was opponent to our search ordain'd,
That joy, still fought, should never be attain'd. Prior.

OPPO'NENT. n. f. [opponens, Lat.]

1. Antagonist; adversary.
2. One who begins the dispute by raising objections to a tenet.

Inasmuch as ye go about to destroy a thing which is in force, and to draw in that which hath not as yet been received, to impose on us that which we think not ourselves bound unto; that therefore ye are not to claim in any conference other than the plaintiffs or opponents part. Hooker.

How becomingly does Philopolis exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator. More.

OPPORTUNE. adj. [opportune, Fr. opportunus, Latin.] Seasonable; convenient; fit; timely; well-timed; proper.

There was nothing to be added to this great king's felicity, being at the top of all worldly bliss, and the perpetual constancy of his prosperous successes, but an opportune death to withdraw him from any future blow of fortune. Bacon.

Will lift us up in spite of fate,
Nearer our ancient seat; perhaps in view
Of those bright confines, whence with neighb'ring arms
And opportune excursion, we may chance
Re-enter heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Consider'd every creature, which of all
Most opportune might serve his wiles; and found
The serpent subtlest beast of all the field. Milton.

OPPORTUNELY. adv. [opportune.] Seasonably; conveniently; with opportunity either of time or place.

He was resolved to chafe a war rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being situate opportune to annoy England either for coast or trade. Bacon's Henry VII.

Against these there is a proper objection, that they offend uniformity; whereof I am therefore opportune induced to say somewhat. Watson's Architecture.

This experiment does opportune supply the deficiency. Boyle.

OPPORTUNITY. n. f. [opportunitas, Fr. opportunitas, Lat.] Fit fit place; time; convenience; suitability of circumstances to any end.

A wife man will make more opportunities than he finds.
Mens behaviour should be like their apparel, not too straight but free for exercise. Bacon, Essay 53.

Opportunity, like a sudden gust,
Hath swell'd my calmer thoughts into a tempest.
Accur'd opportunity!
That work'd our thoughts into desires, desires
To resolutions; those being ripe and quicken'd, Thou giv'st them birth, and bring'st them forth to action. Denham.

Tho' their advice be good, their counsel wise,
Yet length still loses opportunities. Denham.

Neglect no opportunities of doing good, nor check thy desire of doing it, by a vain fear of what may happen. Asterb.

All poets have taken an opportunity to give long descriptions of the night. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

To OPPOSE. v. a. [opponere, French; oppono, Latin.]

1. To act against; to be adverse; to hinder; to resist.

There's no bottom, none
In my voluptuousness; and my desire
All continent impediments would o'erbear,
That did oppose my will. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. To put in opposition; to offer as an antagonist or rival.

If all men are not naturally equal, I am sure all slaves are; and then I may, without presumption, oppose my single opinion to his. Locke.

2. Hostile resistance.

He
Cry'd oh! and mounted; found no opposition
From what he look'd for should oppose. Shakespeare.

Virtue which breaks thro' all opposition,
And all temptation can remove,
Most shines, and most is acceptable above.
He considers Lausus refusing his father at the hazard of his own life, as an image of himself when he took Anchises on his shoulders, and bore him safe thro' the rage of the fire and the opposition of his enemies. Dryden's Dufresny.- 3. Contrariety of affection.

They who never tried the experiment of a holy life, measure sure the laws of God not by their insinual goodnefs, but by the reluctancy and opposition which they find in their own hearts. Tillotson, Serm. 6.

4. Contrariety of interest; contrariety of measures.
5. Contrariety of meaning; diversity of meaning.

The parts of every true opposition do always both concern the same subject, and have reference to the same thing, such otherwise they are but in shew opposite, and not in truth. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.

Reason can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident, nor allow it to entertain probability in opposition to knowledge and certainty. Locke.

To OPRESS. v. a. [oppressus, Lat.]

1. To crush by hardship or unreasonable severity.

Israel and Judah were oppressed together, and all that took them captives held them fast, they refused to let them go. Jer. l. 33.

Alas! a mortal most oppress'd of those

 Heav'n had the best, if not the greater share:
 An active life, long orations forbids,
 Yet still she pray'd, for still the pray'd by deeds. Dryden.

ORA

- ORAL. adj.* [oral, Fr. oris, oris, Latin.] Delivered by mouth;
 not written.
Oral discourse, whose transient faculty dying with the sound that gives them life, and so not subject to a strict review, more easily escapes observation. Locke's Educat.
 St. John was appealed to as the living orale of the church; and as his oral testimony lasted the first century, many have observed, that by a particular providence several of our Saviour's disciples, and of the early converts, lived to a very great age, that they might personally convey the truth of the gospel to those times which were very remote. Addison.
ORALLY. adv. [from oral.] By mouth; without writing.
 Oral tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws of a kingdom, because they are complex, not orally traducible to us to great a distance of ages. Hale's Comm. Laws of Eng.
ORANGE. n. f. [orange, Fr. aurantia, Latin.] The leaves have two lobes or appendages at their base like ears, and cut in form of a heart; the fruit is round and depressed, and of a yellow colour when ripe, in which it differs from the citron and lemon. The species are eight. Miller.
 I will discharge it in your straw-colour'd beard, your orange tawny beard. Shaksp. Mid. Night's Dream.
 The notary came aboard, holding in his hand a fruit like an orange, but of colour between orange tawny and scarlet, which cast a most excellent odour, and is used for a preservative against infection. Bacon's New Atlantis.
 Fine oranges, sauce for your veal,
 Are charming when squeez'd in a pot of brown ale. Swift.
 The ideas of orange colour and azure, produced in the mind by the same infusion of liguin naphriticum, are no less distinct ideas than those of the same colours taken from oranges. Locke.
ORANGERY. n. f. [orangerie, Fr.] Plantation of oranges.
 A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangerie, or artificial green house. Spectator, N. 477.
ORANGEMUSK. n. f. See PEAR, of which it is a species.
ORANGEWIFE. n. f. [orange and wife.] A woman who sells oranges.
 You wear out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an *orange*wife and a foflet seller. Shaksp.
ORATION. n. f. [oratio, Fr. oratio, Lat.] A speech made according to the laws of rhetoric; a harangue; a declamation.
 There shall I try,
 In my oration, how the people take
 The cruel issue of these bloody men. Shaksp. Jy. Caf.
 This gives life and spirit to every thing that is spoken, awakens the dullest spirits, and adds a singular grace and excellency both to the person and his oration. Watts.
ORATORICAL. adj. [from orator.] Rhetorical; befitting an orator.
 Where he speaks in an oratorical, affecting, or persuasive way, let this be explained by other places where he treats of the same theme in a doctrinal way. Watts.
ORATOR. n. f. [orator, Fr. orator, Lat.]
 1. A public speaker; a man of eloquence.
 Poor queen and son! your labour is but lost;
 For Warwick is a subtle orator. Shaksp. Henry VI.
 As when of old some orator renown'd,
 In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence Flourish'd, since mute! to some great cause address'd, Stood in himself collected; while each part,
 Motion, each act, won audience. Milton's Par. Lost.
 The constant design of both these orators in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point. Swift.
 I have listened to an orator of this species, without being able to understand one single sentence. Swift.
 Both orators to much renown'd,
 In their own depths of eloquence were drown'd. Dryden.
 2. A petitioner. This sense is used in addresses to chancery.
ORATORY. n. f. [oratoria, oris, Lat.]
 1. Eloquence; rhetorical skill.
 Each pasture stored with sheep feeding with sober security, while the pretty lambs with bleating oratory craved the dams comfort. Stacy.
 When a world of men
 Could not prevail with all their oratory,
 Yet hath a woman's kindness over-rul'd. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 When my oratory grew tow'rd end,
 I bid them that did love their country's good,
 Cry, God save Richard. Shaksp. Rich. III.
 Sighs now breath'd
 Unutterable, which the spirit of pray'r
 Inspir'd, and wing'd for heav'n with speedier flight
 Than loudest oratory. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
 By this kind of oratory and professing to decline their own inclinations and wishes, purely for peace and unity, they prevailed over those who were still surpris'd. Clarend.
 The former who had to deal with a people of much more politeness, learning, and wit, laid the greatest weight of his oratory upon the strength of his arguments. Swift.

ORB

- Come harmless characters, that no one hit,
 Come Henley's oratory, Osborn's wit. Pope.
 2. Exercise of eloquence.
 The Romans had feised upon the fleet of the Antiates, among which there were six armed with rostra, with which the consul Menenius adorned the publick place of oratory. Arb.
 3. [Oratoire, French.]
Oratory signifies a private place, which is deputed and allotted for prayer alone, and not for the general celebration of divine service. Ayliffe's Paragon.
 They began to erect to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner, which neither was possible by reason of the poor estate of the church, and had been perilous in regard of the world's envy towards them. Hooker.
 Do not omit thy prayers for want of a good oratory or place to pray in; nor thy duty for want of temporal encouragements. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
ORB. n. f. [orbis, Fr. orbis, Latin.]
 1. Sphere; orbicular body; circular body.
 A mighty collection of water inclosed in the bowels of the earth, constitutes an huge orb in the interior or central parts; upon the surface of which orb of water the terrestrial strata are expanded. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

 Of his fierce chariot roll'd as with the found
 Of torrent floods. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
 4. Circle; line drawn round.
 5. Circle described by any of the mundane spheres.
 Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricities and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs, though no such things were. Bacon.
 With smiling aspect you serenely move,
 In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love. Dryden.
 6. Period; revolution of time.
 Self-begot, self-raisd,
 By our own quick'ning pow'r, when fatal course
 Had circled his full orb, the birth mature
 Of this our native heav'n. Milt. Par. Lost, b. v.
 7. Sphere of action.
 Will you again unknot
 This churlish knot of all abhorred war,
 And move in that obedient orb again,
 Where you did give a fair and nat'ral light. Shaksp.
 8. It is applied by Milton to the eye, as being luminous and spherical.
 A drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
 Or dim suffusion veil'd. Milton.
ORBIT. n. f. [orbatus, Lat.] Privation of parents or children.
ORBED. adj. [from orb.]
 1. Round; circular; orbicular.
 All those sayings will I overfwear,
 And all those swearings keep as true in soul,
 As doth that orbed continent the fire,
 That ferys day from night. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
 2. Formed into a circle.
 Truth and justice then
 Will down return to men,
 Or'd in a rainbow, and like glories wearing. Milton.

ORD

5. Mandate; precept; command.
Give order to my servants, that they take
No note of our being absent. Shaksp. Adv. of Ven.
If the lords of the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, presently some nobleman deputed by the tables published a protestation against those orders and proclamations.
Clarendon.
Upon this new fright, an order was made by both houses for disarming all the papists in England; upon which, and the like orders, though seldom any thing was after done, yet it served to keep up the apprehensions in the people, of dangers and designs, and to disincite them from any reverence or affection to the queen. Clarendon.
I have received an order under your hand for a thousand pounds in words at length. Tatler, N^o. 60.
6. Rule; regulation.
The church hath authority to establish that for an order at one time, which at another time it may abolish, and in both do well. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.
7. Regular government.
The night, their numbers, and the sudden act
Would dash all order, and protect their fact. Daniel.

themselves, they are all in some sort parties. Dryden.
Having in his youth made a good progress in learning, that he might dedicate himself more intirely to religion he entered into holy orders, and in a few years became renowned for his sanctity of life. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 164.
12. Means to an end.
Virgins must remember, that the virginity of the body is only excellent in order to the purity of the soul; for in the same degree that virgins live more spiritually than other persons, in the same degree is their virginity a more excellent state. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
We should behave reverently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly towards men; and in order to the better discharge of these duties, we should govern ourselves in the use of sensual delights, with temperance. Tillotson, Sermon 6.
The best knowledge is that which is of greatest use in or- der to our eternal happiness. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
What we see is in order only to what we do not see; and both these states must be joined together. Atterbury.
One man pursues power in order to wealth, and another wealth in order to power, which last is the safer way, and generally followed. Swift's Exam. N^o. 27.
13. Measures; care.
If were meet you should take some order for the soldiers, which are now first to be discharged and disposed of some way; which may otherwise grow to as great inconvenience as all this that you have quit us from. Spenser on Ireland.
Provide me soldiers,
Whilst I take order for mine own affairs. Shaksp.
The money promised unto the king, he took no order for, albeit Solistratus required it. 2 Mac. iv. 27.
If any of the family be distressed, order is taken for their relief and competent means to live. Bacon.
14. [In architecture.] A system of the several members, ornaments, and proportions of columns and pilasters; or it is a regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, especially those of a column; so as to form one beautiful whole: on order is a certain rule for the proportions of columns, and for the figures which some of the parts ought to have, on the account of the proportions that are given them.
There are five orders of columns; three of which are Greek,
viz. the doric, ionic, and corinthian; and two Italian, viz.
the tuscan and composite. The whole is composed of two parts at least, the column and the entablature, and of four

- parts at the most; where there is a pedestal under the column, and one acroter or little pedestal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts; the base, the shaft, and the capital; which parts are all different in the several orders.
In the tuscan order, any height being given, divide it into ten parts and three quarters, called diameters, by diameters is meant the thickness of the shaft at the bottom, the pedestal having two; the column with base and capital, seven;
and the entablature one and three quarters.
In the doric order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third; the pedestals having two and one third, the column eight, and the entablature two.
In the ionic order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half, the pedestals having two and two thirds,
the column nine, and the entablature one and four fifths.
In the corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half, the pedestals having three, the column nine and a half, and the entablature two.
In the composite order, the whole height is divided into fifteen diameters and one third; the pedestals having three and one third, the column ten, and the entablature two.
In a colonnade or range of pillars, the intercolumniation or space between columns in the tuscan order, is four diameters.
In the doric order, two and three quarters; in the ionic or- der, two and a quarter; in the corinthian order, two; and in the composite order, one and a half. Builder's Dict.

How should those active particles, ever and anon justified by the occasion of other bodies, whereof there is an infinite store, so orderly keep their cells without any alteration of site. Granville.
In the body, when the principal parts, the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferior smaller vessels act orderly

- orderly* and duly, there arises a sweet enjoyment upon the whole, which we call health. South's Sermon.
ORDINABLE, adj. [ordinatio, Lat.] Such as may be appointed.
All the ways of economy God hath used toward a rational creature, to reduce mankind to that course of living which is most perfectly agreeable to our nature, and by the mercy of God ordinable to eternal bliss. Hamm.
ORDINAL, adj. [ordinalis, Fr. ordinalis, Lat.] Noting order:
as, second, third.
The moon's age is thus found, add to the epact the day of the month and the ordinal number of that month from March inclusive, because the epact begins at March, and the sum of those, casting away thirty or twenty-nine, as often as it ariseth, is the age of the moon. Helder.

4. Ugly; not handsome: as she is an ordinary woman.
ORDINARY, n. f.
1. Established judge of ecclesiastical causes.
The evil will
Of all their parishioners they had constrain'd,
Who to the ordinary of them complai'd. Hubbard.
If fault be in these things any where justly found, law hath referred the whole disposition and redress thereof to the or- inary of the place. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.
2. Settled establishment.
Spain had no other wars save those which were grown into an ordinary; now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Valtoline and Palatinate. Bacon.
3. Actual and constant office.
Villiers had an intimation of the king's pleasure to be his cup-bearer at large; and the summer following he was admitted in ordinary. Watt.
4. Regular price of a meal.
Our courteous Antony,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast;
And for his ordinary pays his heart.
For what his eyes eat only. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopat.
5. A place of eating established at a certain price.
They reckon all their errors for accomplishments; and all the odd words they have picked up in a coffee-house, or a gaming ordinary, are produced as flowers of style. Swift.
To ORDINATE, v. a. [ordinatus, Latin.]
1. To appoint.
Finding how the certain right did stand,
With full consent this man did ordinate.
The heir apparent to the crown and land. Daniel.
ORDINATE, adj. [ordinatus, Lat.] Regular; methodical.
Ordinate figures are such as have all their sides, and all their angles equal. Ray on the Creation.
ORDINATION, n. f. [ordinatio, Lat. from ordinate.]
1. Established order or tendency.
Virtue and vice have a natural ordination to the happiness and misery of life respectively. Norris.
2. The act of investing any man with sacerdotal power.
Though ordained by Arian bishops, his ordination was never questioned. Stillington.
St. Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a prime ruler of the church, and entrusted with a large diocese under the immediate government of their respective elders;
and those deriving authority from his ordination. South.
ORDNANCE, n. f. [This was anciently written more frequently ordnance; but ordnance is used for distinction.] Cannon;
great guns.
Have I not heard great ordnance in the field?
And heav'n's artillery thunder in the skies? Shaksp.
When a ship feels or rolls in foul weather, the breaking loose of ordnance is a thing very dangerous. Raleigh.
There are examples now of wounded persons that have roared for anguish and torment at the discharge of ordnance, though at a very great distance. Bentley's Sermon.
ORDONNANCE, n. f. [French.] Disposition of figures in a picture.
ORDURE, n. f. [ordure, French; from sordus, Lat. Skinner.]
Dung; filth.
Gardners with ordure hide those roots
That shall first spring and be most delicate. Shaksp.
Working upon human ordure, and by long preparation rendering it odoriferous, he terms it salicta occidentalis. Brown.
We added fat pollutions of our own,
T' encrease the steaming ordures of the stage. Dryden.
Renew'd by ordure's sympathetic force,
As oil'd with magic juices for the course, Pope.
Vig'rous he rises.
ORE, n. f. [ore, or opa, Saxon; oer, Dutch, a mine.]
1. Metal unrefined; metal yet in its mineral state.
Round about him lay on every side,
Great heaps of gold that never would be spent;
Of which some were rude ore not purify'd
Of Mulciber's devouring element. Fairy Queen.
They would have brought them the gold ore aboard their ships. Raleigh's Apology.
A hill not far,
Shone with a glossy scurf, undoubted sign
That in his womb was hid metallic ore,
The work of sulphur. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
Who have labour'd more
To search the treasures of the Roman store,
Or dig in Grecian mines for purer ore?
We walk in dreams on fairy land,
Where golden ore lies mixt with common find. Dryden.
Those who unripe veins in mines explore,
On the rich bed again the warm turf lay,
Till time digests the yet imperfect ore,
And know it will be gold another day. Dryden.
These

Those profounder regions they explore,
Where metals ripen in vast cakes of ore.
2. Metal.

The liquid ore he drain'd
First his own tools; then what might else be wrought, Futile, or grav'n in metal. Milt. Par. Left, b. xi.
OREWEED. } n. f. A weed either growing upon the rocks un-OREWOOD. } der high water mark, or broken from the bottom of the sea by rough weather, and cast upon the next by the wind and flood. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
ORGAL. n. f. Lees of wine. Ans.
ORGAN. n. f. [organe, Fr. ὄργανον.]
1. Natural instrument; as the tongue is the organ of speech, the lungs of respiration.

When he shall hear she died upon his words,
The ever lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparell'd in more precious habit,
Than when the liv'd indeed. Shakespeare.
For a mean and organ, by which this operative virtue might be contained, God appointed the light to be united,
and gave it also motion and heat. Raleigh.
The aptness of birds is not so much in the conformity of the organs of speech, as in their attention. Bacon.

Can judge and chafe, without the body's aid;
Tho' on such objects they are working still,
As thro' the body's organs are convey'd. Davies.
2. An instrument of music consisting of pipes filled with wind and of stops, touched by the hand. [Orgue, Fr.]
A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes in the world, and making every one found a particular note. Keil.
While in more lengthen'd notes and flow,
The deep, majestic, solemn organs blow. Pope.

ORGANICAL. } adj. [organique, Fr. organicus, Lat.]
ORGANICK. }

1. Consisting of various parts co-operating with each other.
He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Deane.

Organick, or impulse of vocal air,
His fraudulent temptation thus began: Milt. P. Left.
The organical structure of human bodies, whereby they live and move and are vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent being. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Instrumental; acting as instruments of nature or art, to a certain end.
Read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton.

3. Respecting organs.
She could not produce a monster of any thing that hath more vital and organical parts than a rock of marble. Roy.
They who want the sense of discipline, or hearing, are also by consequence deprived of speech, not by any immediate, organical indisposition, but for want of discipline.

ORGANICALLY. adv. [from organical.] By means of organs or instruments; by organical disposition of parts.
All stones, metals, and minerals, are real vegetables; that is, grow organically from proper seeds, as well as plants.
Locke on Nat. Philosophy.

ORGANICALNESS. n. f. [from organical.] State of being or-ganical.

ORGANISM. n. f. [from organ.] Organical structure.
How admirable is the natural structure or organism of bodies. Grew's Cofmal. b. i. c. 4.

ORGANIST. n. f. [organiste, Fr. from organ.] One who plays on the organ.
He is an organist, and serves that office in a publick choir.
Boyle on Colours.

ORGANIZATION. n. f. [from organize.] Construction in which the parts are so disposed as to be subservient to each other.
Every man's senses differ as much from others in their figure, colour, site, and infinite other peculiarities in the organization, as any one man's can from itself, through divers accidental variations. Glauv. Scpf. c. xxvi.

That being then one plant, which has such an organization of parts in one coherent body, partaking of one common life, it continues to be the same plant, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, in a like continued organization. Locke.

TO ORGANIZE. v. a. [organiser, Fr. from organ.] To construct so as that one part co-operates with another; to form organically.

As the soul doth organize the body, and give unto every member thereof that substance, quantity, and shape, which nature seem most expedient, to the inward grace of sacraments may teach what ferveth best for their outward form.

ORI

Hooker, b. v. f. 58.

A genial and cherishing heat so acts upon the fit and obsequious matter, wherein it was harboured, as to organize and fashion that disposed matter according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.

Those nobler faculties in the mind, matter organized could never produce. Roy on the Creation.

The identity of the same man consists in a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.
ORGANLOFT. n. f. [organ and loft.] The loft where the organs stand.

Five young ladies of no small fame for their great reverence of manners, would go no where with their lovers but to an organloft in a church, where they had a cold treat and some few opera songs. Tatler, N^o. 61.

ORGANPIPE. n. f. [organ and pipe.] The pipe of a musical organ.

The thunder,
That deep and dreadful organpipe pronounc'd
The name of Prosper. Shakespeare's Tempest.

ORGANY. n. f. [organum, Lat.] An herb. Ans.

ORGASM. n. f. [orgasme, Fr. ὄργασμος.] Sudden vehemence.

By means of the curious lodgment and inoculation of the auditory nerves, the orgasm of the spirits should be allayed, and perturbations of the mind quieted. Derham's Physico-Theol.
ORGEIS. n. f. A sea-fish, called likewise organling. Both seem a corruption of the orkenyling, as being taken on the Or-keny coast. Ans.

ORGILLOUS. adj. [orgueilleux, French.] Proud; haughty.

The princes orgillous, their high blood chafed,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships. Shaksf.

ORGIES. n. f. [orgies, Fr. orgie, Lat.] Mad rites of Bacchus; frantick revels.

These are nights
Solemn to the shining rites,
Of the fairy prince and knights,
While the moon their orgies lights. Ben. Johnson.

She feign'd nocturnal orgies; left my bed,
And, mix'd with Trojan dames, the dances led. Dryd.

ORICALCH. n. f. [orichalcum, Lat.] Brals.

Not Bilbo steel, nor brals from Corinth fet,
Nor costly orichalks from strange Phoenice,
But such as could both Phœbus' arrows ward,
And th' hailing darts of heav'n beating hard. Spenser.

ORIENT. adj. [orient, Latin.]

1. Rising as the sun.
Moon that now meet'st the orient sun, now fly't
With the fix'd stars. Milton's Par. Left, b. v.

When fair morn orient in heav'n appear'd. Milton.

2. Eastern; oriental.

3. Bright; shining; glittering; gaudy; sparkling.

The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,
Shall come again transform'd to orient pearl;
Advantaging their loan with interest,
Oftentimes double gain of happiness. Shaksf.

There do breed yearly an innumerable company of gnats, whose property is to fly unto the eye of the lion, as being bright and orient thing. Abbot on the Psalms.

We have spoken of the cause of orient colours in birds;
which is by the fineness of the frainer. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Morning light
More orient in yon western cloud, that draws O'er the blue firmament a radiant white. Milton.

In thick shelter of black shades imbrow'd,
He offers to each weary traveller
His orient liquor in a crystal glass,
To quench the drouth of Phœbus. Milton.

The chiefs about their necks the scutecheons wore,
With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er. Dryden.

ORIENT. n. f. [orient, Fr.] The east; the part where the sun first appears.

ORIENTAL. adj. [oriental, French.] Eastern; placed in the east; proceeding from the east.

Your ships went as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to Pequim upon the oriental seas, as far as to the borders of the east Tartary. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Some ascribing hereto the generation of gold, conceive the bodies of this situation to receive some appropriate influence from the sun's ascendent, and oriental radiations. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. vi.

ORIENTAL. n. f. An inhabitant of the eastern parts of the world.

They have been of that great use to following ages, as to be imitated by the Arabians and other orientals. Grew.

ORIENTALISM. n. f. [from oriental.] An idiom of the eastern languages; an eastern mode of speech.

ORIENTALITY.

ORI

ORIENTALITY. n. f. [from oriental.] State of being oriental.

His revolution being regular, it hath no power nor efficacy peculiar from its orientality, but equally disperseth his beams.
Brown's V. Err. b. vi.

ORIFICE. n. f. [orifice, Fr. orificium, Lat.] Any opening or perforation.

The prince of Orange, in his first hurt by the Spanish boy, could find no means to staunch the blood, but was fain to have the orifice of the wound stopp'd by men's thumbs, succeeding one another for the space of two days. Bacon.

Their mouths
With hideous orifice gap'd on us wide, Portending hollow truce. Milton's Par. Left, b. vi.

Etana was bored through the top with a monstrous orifice. Addison's Guardian, N^o. 103.

Blood-letting, Hippocrates faith, should be done with broad lancets or swords, in order to make a large orifice by stabbing or pertusion. Arbutnot on Cains.

ORIFLAMB. n. f. [probably a corruption of auriflamme, Lat.
or flamme d'or, Fr. in like manner as ornement is corrupted.]
A golden standard. Ans.

ORIGAN. n. f. [origan, Fr. origanum, Lat.] Wild marjorum.

I saw her in her proper hue,
Bathing herself in organ and thyme. Fairy Queen.

ORIGIN. } n. f. [origine, Fr. origo, Lat.]

ORIGNAL. } n. f. [origine, Fr. origo, Lat.]

1. Beginning; first existence.

The sacred historian only treats of the origins of terrestrial animals. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Nature which contains its origin.

Cannot be border'd certain in itself. Shaksf. King Lear.

If any station upon earth be honourable, theirs was; and their posterity therefore have no reason to blush at the memory of such an original. Atterbury.

Original of beings! pow'r divine!
Since that I live and that I think, is thine. Prior.

These great orbs,
Primitive founts, and origins of light. Prior.

3. First copy; archetype; that from which any thing is transcribed or translated. In this sense origin is not used.

Compare this translation with the original, and the three first stanzas are rendered almost word for word, and not only with the same elegance, but with the same turn of expression.

External material things, as the objects of sensation; and the operations of our minds within, as the objects of reflection; are the only originals from whence all our ideas take their beginnings. Locke.

4. Derivation; descent.

They, like the seed from which they sprung, accrue
Against the gods immortal hatred nurst;
An impious, arrogant, and cruel brood,
Expressing their original from blood. Dryden.

ORIGNAL. adj. [original, Fr. originalis, Latin.] Primitive; pristine; first.

The original question was, whether God by this law hath forbidden the giving any worship to himself by an image?

Had Adam obeyed God, his original perfection, the knowledge and ability God at first gave him, would still have continued. Wade's Prep. for Death.

You fill, fair mother, in your offspring trace
The flock of beauty destin'd for the race;
Kind nature, forming them the pattern took,
From heav'n's first work, and Eve's original look. Prior.

ORIGINALLY. adv. [from original.]

1. Primarily; with regard to the first cause.

A very great difference between a king that holdeth his crown by a willing act of estates, and one that holdeth it originally by the law of nature and descent of blood. Bacon.

A present blessing upon our fairs, is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity. Smallbridge's Sermons.

2. At first.

The metallic and mineral matter, found in the perpendicular intervals of the strata, was originally, and at the time of the deluge, lodged in the bodies of those strata. Woodw.

3. As the first author.

For what originally others writ,
May be so well disguis'd and so improv'd,
That with some justice it may pass for yours. Rowcomm.

ORIGNALNESS. n. f. [from original.] The quality or state of being original.

ORIGINARY. adj. [originaire, Fr. from origin.]

1. Productive; causing existence.

The production of animals in the ordinary way, requires a certain degree of warmth, which proceeds from the sun's influence. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

2. Primitive; that which was the first state.

Remember I am built of clay, and must Resolve to my ordinary dust. Sandy's Par. on Job.

ORP

TO ORIGINATE. v. a. [from origin.] To bring into existence.

ORIGINATION. n. f. [originatio, Lat. from originate.] The act of bringing into existence; first production.

The tradition of the originatio of mankind seems to be universal; but the particular methods of that originatio ex-cogitated by the heathen, were particular. Hale.

This cruce is propagated by animal parents, to wit, butterflies, after the common originatio of all caterpillars. Roy.

Descartes first introduced the fancy of making a world, and deducing the originatio of the universe from mechanical principles. Keil.

ORISONS. n. f. [oraison, French: this word is variously accented; Shakespeare has the accent both on the first and second syllables; Milton and Cragshaw on the first, others on the second.] A prayer; a supplication.

Nymph, in thy orisons
Be all thy sins remember'd. Shaksf. Hamlet.

Alas! your too much love and care of me,
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch. Shaksf.

He went into St. Paul's church, where he had orisons and Te Deum sung. Bacon's Henry VII.

My wakeful lay shall knock
At th' oriental gates, and duly mock
The early larks thrill orisons, to be An anthem at the day's nativity. Cragshaw.

His daily orisons attract our ears.
Lovely they bow'd, adoring, and began Their orisons, each morning duly paid. Sandy's Par. on Job.

So went he on with his orisons,
Which, if you mark them well, were wife ones. Milton.

Here at dead of night
The hermit oft, mid his orisons, hears Aghast the voice of time departing tow'rs. Cotton.

ORLOP. n. f. [overloop, Dutch.] The middle deck. Dyer.

A small ship of the king's called the Penfie, was assailed by the Lyon, a principal ship of Scotland; wherein the Penfie so applyed her shot, that the Lyon's orlop was broken, her fails and tackling torn; and lastly, she was boarded and taken. Steuart.

ORNAMENT. n. f. [ornamentum, Lat. ornamen, Fr.]

1. Embellishment; decoration.

So may the outward shows be least themselves;
The world is full deceiv'd with ornament. Shaksf.

The Tufcan chief, to me has sent Their crowns, and ev'ry regal ornament. Dryden.

No circumstances of life can place a man so far below the notice of the world, but that his virtues or vices will render him, in some degree, an ornament or disgrace to his profession. Rogers, Sermon 9.

2. Honour; that which confers dignity.

The persons of different qualities in both sexes, are indeed allowed their different ornaments; but these are by no means costly, being rather designed as marks of distinction than to make a figure. Addison on Italy.

ORNAMENTAL. adj. [from ornament.] Serving to decoration;
giving embellishment.

Some think it most ornamental to wear their bracelets on their wrists, others about their ancles. Brown.

If the kind be capable of more perfection, though rather in the ornamental parts of it, than the essential, what rules of morality or respect have I broken, in naming the defects that they may hereafter be amended? Dryden.

Even the Heathens have esteem'd this variety not only ornamental to the earth, but a proof of the wisdom of the creator. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

If no advancement of knowledge can be had from universities, the time there spent is lost; every ornamental part of education is better taught elsewhere. Scott on Religion.

ORNAMENTALLY. adv. [from ornamental.] In such a manner as may confer embellishment.

ORNAMENTED. adj. [from ornament.] Embellished; bedecked.

ORNATE. adj. [ornatus, Lat.] Bedecked; decorated; fine.

What thing of sea or land,
Female of sex it seems,
That so bedeck'd, ornate and gay,
Comes this way sailing. Milton's Agonistes.

ORNATENESS. n. f. [from ornate.] Finery; state of being embellished.

ORNATURE. n. f. [ornatus, Lat.] Decoration. Ans.

ORNOBOLIST. n. f. [ὀνοβόλις and ὀνοβόλος.] One who examines the flight of birds in order to foretell futurity.

ORNOLOGY. n. f. [ὀνοβόλις and ὀνοβόλος.] A discourse on birds.

ORPHAN. n. f. [ὀρφανός; orphanos, Fr.] A child who has lost father or mother, or both.

Poor orphan in the wide world scattered,
As budding branch rent from the native tree,
And thrown forth until it be withered:
Such is the state of man. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
18 S

ORT

To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath?
Sad widows, by thee rifled, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain.
The sea with spoils his angry bullets throw,
Widows and orphans making as they go.
Pity, with a parent's mind,
This helpless orphan whom thou leav'st behind.
O'BRIAN. adj. [Orphelin, Fr.] Bereft of parents.
This king left orphan both of father and mother, found his estate, when he came to age, so disjointed even in the noblest and strongest limbs of government, that the name of a king was grown odious. Sidney, l. ii.
O'RHANAGE. n. f. [Orphelinage, Fr. from orphan.] State of orphanism. } of an orphan.
O'RHANISM. }
O'RHANMENT. n. f. [auripigmentum, Lat. orpiment, orpin, Fr.]
True and genuine orpiment is a foliaceous fossil, sometimes found in masses of two or three inches diameter, and one inch in thickness; but it is oftener met with in smaller con-geries of flakes from an eighth of an inch to a third in diameter, lodged in zarnich. See ZARNICH. It is of a fine and pure texture, remarkably heavy, and its colour is a bright and beautiful yellow, like that of gold. It is not hard but very tough, easily bending without breaking: some have declared orpiment to be only muscovy talk, flamed by accident. But talk is always elastic, but orpiment not so; talk also remains unaltered in the strongest fire, whereas orpiment melts readily, and as readily burns away. Orpiment has been supposed to contain gold, and is found in mines of gold, silver, and copper, and sometimes in the strata of marl.
It is frequent in the East-Indies and the Turkish dominions, the finest coming from Smyrna. We have it also in Germany and Saxony. The ancients were well acquainted with this drug, which they called arsenicon; and though they were utterly unacquainted with the poisonous substance called arsenic, yet orpiment has been by some very unjustly deemed a poison; but it appears to be an innocent medicine which the ancients prescribed internally. The painters are very fond of it as a gold colour. Hill's Mat. Med.
For the golden colour, it may be made by some small mixture of orpiment, such as they use to brais in the yellow alchymy; it will easily recover that which the iron loseth. Bacon.
O'RHANOTROPY. n. f. [ὀρρανότης and τροπή] An hospital for orphans.
O'RPINE. n. f. [orpin, Fr.] Liverer or rose root, anacampterus, Telipium, or Rhodia radix. A plant. It hath a rose shaped flower, consisting of several leaves placed orbicularly; out of whose many-leaved empalement rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a three-cornered fruit, consisting of one cell, which is filled with roundish seeds: the leaves are placed alternately on the branches. It is a low plant, whose branches trail on the ground; the leaves are small and roundish, of a glaucous colour, and of a pretty thick confidence. The flowers are small, and of a whitish green colour. Miller.
Cool violets and orpine growing still,
Embathed balm and cheerful galingale. Spenser.
O'RRERY. n. f. An instrument which by many complicated movements represents the revolutions of the heavenly bodies.
It was first made by Mr. Rowley, a mathematician born at Litchfield, and so named from his patron the earl of Orrery:
by one or other of this family almost every art has been encouraged or improved.
O'RRIS. n. f. [oris, Latin.] A plant and flower.
It hath no leaves to the flower, but consists of many flamina arising from a five-leaved empalement. The pointal becomes the seed, which is flat and orbicular, and inclosed in the empalement, which becomes a foliaceous capsule, in which are included two sorts of seeds. Miller.
The nature of the orris root is almost singular; for roots that are in any degree sweet, it is but the same sweetness with the wood or leaf; but the orris is not sweet in the leaf;
neither is the flower any thing so sweet as the root. Bacon.
O'RRIS. n. f. [old Fr.] A sort of gold or silver lace.
O'RTS. n. f. feldom with a singular. [This word is derived by Skinner from ort, German, the fourth part of any thing;
by Mr. Lye more reasonably from orda, Irish, a fragment.
In Anglo Saxon, ord signifies the beginning; whence in some provinces adds and ends; for ords and ends signify remnants, scattered pieces, refuse; from ord thus used probably came ort.] Refuse; things left or thrown away.
He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth;
A barren-spirited fellow, one that feeds
On abject oris and imitations. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
The fractions of her faith, oris of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques
Of her eaten faith, are bound to Diomedes. Shakespeare.
Much good do'st thou then;
Brave pluck and velvet men;
Can feed on oris and fate in your stage-cloths;
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The flagers, and the stage-wrights too. Bew. Johnson.

OSC

ORTHODOX. adj. [ὀρθός and δοξία; orthodox, Fr.] Sound in opinion and doctrine; not heretical.
Be you persuaded and settled in the true protestant religion professed by the church of England; which is as found and orthodox in the doctrine thereof, as any Christian church in the world. Bacon.
Eternal bliss is not immediately superfructed on the most orthodox beliefs; but as our Saviour saith, if ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them; the doing must be first superfructed on the knowing or believing, before any happiness can be built on it. Hammond.
ORTHODOXY. adv. [from orthodox.] With soundness of opinion.
The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is so soundly and so orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to the honour of our religion. Bacon.
ORTHODOXY. n. f. [ὀρθόδοξία and orthodoxie, Fr. from orthodox.]
Soundness in opinion and doctrine.
I do not attempt explaining the mysteries of the christian religion, since Providence intended there should be mysteries, it cannot be agreeable to piety, orthodoxy, or good sense, to go about it. Swift.
ORTHODROMICKS. n. f. [from ὀρθόδρομος and δρόμος.] The art of sailing in the ark of some great circle, which is the shortest or straightest distance between any two points on the surface of the globe. Harris.
ORTHODROMY. n. f. [ὀρθόδρομος and δρόμος.] orthodromie, Fr.]
Sailing in a straight course.
ORTHOGON. n. f. [ὀρθός and γωνία.] A rectangled figure.
The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments; your cylinder for vaulted turrets and round buildings; your orthogon and pyramid, for sharp steeples. Peuch.
ORTHOGONAL. adj. [orthogoneli, Fr. from orthogon.] Rectangular.
ORTHOGRAPHER. n. f. [ὀρθόγραφος and γραφία.] One who spells according to the rules of grammar.
He was wont to speak plain, like an honest man and a soldier; and now he is turn'd orthographer, his words are just so many strange dishes. Shakespeare.
ORTHOGRAPHICAL. n. f. [from orthography.]
1. Rightly spelled.
2. Relating to the spelling.
I received from him the following letter, which, after having rectified some little orthographical mistakes, I shall make a present of to the public. Addison's Spectator.
3. Delineated according to the elevation, not the ground-plot.
In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation and the just dimensions of each face, and of what belongs to it. Mortimer's Hylph.
ORTHOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from orthographical.]
1. According to the rules of spelling.
2. According to the elevation.
ORTHOGRAPHY. n. f. [ὀρθόγραφος and γραφία.] orthographie, Fr.]
1. The part of grammar which teaches how words should be spelled.
This would render languages much more easy to be learned, as to reading and pronouncing, and especially as to the writing them, which now as they stand we find to be troublesome, and it is no small part of grammar which treats of orthography and right pronunciation. Hillier.
2. The art or practice of spelling.
In London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs;
all which reduced to writings, would entirely confound ortho- graphy. Swift.
3. The elevation of a building delineated.
You have the orthography or upright of this ground-plot, and the explanation thereof with a scale of feet and inches.
Moxon's Mech. Exer.
ORTHOPOEA. n. f. [ὀρθόποια and orthopoeia, Fr.] A disorder of the lungs, in which respiration can be performed only in an upright posture.
His disease was an asthma oft turning to an orthopoeia; the cause a translocation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey on Consumption.

The actions upon the solids are stimulating or increasing their vibrations, or oscillatory motions. Arbutnot.
OSCITANCY. n. f. [oscitantia, Lat.]
1. The act of yawning.
2. Unusual sleepiness; carelessness.
If persons of so circumspect a piety, have been thus overtaken, what security can there be for our wreckless oscitancy?
Government of the Tongue.
It might proceed from the oscitancy of transcribers, who,
to dispatch their work the sooner, used to write all numbers in cyphers. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 470.
OSCITANT. adj. [oscitans, Latin.]
1. Yawning; unusually sleepy.
2. Sleepy; sluggish.
Our oscitant lazy piety gave vacancy for them, and they will now lend none back again for more active duty.
Decay of Piety.
OSCITATION. n. f. [oscito, Lat.] The act of yawning.
I shall defer considering this subject till I come to my treatise of oscitation, laughter, and ridicule. Tatler, N^o. 63.
O'SIER. n. f. [osier, French.] A tree of the willow kind, growing by the water, of which the twigs are used for basket-work.
The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place. Shak.
Ere the sun advance his burning eye,
I must fill up this osier cage of ours.
With baleful weeds and precious juiced flowers. Shakespeare.
Bring them for food sweet boughs and osiers cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hair tick ruck. May's Virg.
Like her no nymph can willing osiers bend,
In basket-works, which painted freaks commend. Dryd.
Along the marshes spread,
We made the osier fringed bank our bed. Po. Odyss.
O'SMUND. n. f. A plant. It is sometimes used in medicine.
It grows upon bogs in divers parts of England. Miller.
O'SPRAY. n. f. [Corrupted from ospraga, Latin.] The sea-eagle, of which it is reported, that when he hovers in the air, all the fish in the water turn up their bellies, and lie flat for him to seize which he pleases. Hammer.
I think he'll be to Rome
As is the ospray to the fish who takes it.
By sovereignty of nature. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
Among the fowls shall not be eaten, the eagle, the osprage, and the ospray. Numbers xi. 13.
OSSELET. n. f. [French.] A little hard substance arising on the inside of a horse's knee, among the small bones; it grows out of a gummy substance which fastens those bones together. Farrier's Dict.
O'SSICLE. n. f. [ossiculum, Latin.] A small bone.
There are three very little bones in the ear, upon whose right constitution depends the due tension of the tympanum; and if the action of one little muscle, which serves to draw one of these ossicles, fix to the tympanum, be lost or abated, the tension of that membrane ceasing, found is hindered from coming into the ear. Hilder on Speech.
O'SSTRICK. adj. [ossa and facis, Lat.] Having the power of making bones, or changing caraceous or membranous to bony substance.
If the caries be superficial, and the bone firm, you may by medicaments consume the moisture in the caries, dry the bone, and dispose it, by virtue of its ossific faculty, to thrust out a callus, and make separation of its caries. Wifeman.
O'STIFICATION. n. f. [from ossify.] Change of caraceous, membranous, or cartilaginous, into bony substance.
Ossifications or indurations of the artery, appear so constantly in the beginnings of aneurisms, that it is not easy to judge whether they are the cause or the effect of them. Sharp.
O'STRAGE. n. f. [ostraga, Lat. ostragae, Fr.] A kind of eagle, whose flesh is forbid under the name of gryphon. The os- traga or ospray, is thus called, because it breaks the bones of animals in order to come at the marrow. It is said to dig up bodies in church-yards, and eat what it finds in the bones, which has been the occasion that the Latins called it avis bystaria. Calmet.
Among the fowls shall not be eaten the eagle and the ostrage, and the ospray. Num. xi. 13.
To O'SSTRY. v. a. [ossa and facis.] To change to bone.
The dilated aorta every where in the neighbourhood of the cyst is generally ossified. Sharp's Surgery.
O'SSTRIVOROUS. adj. [ossa and voros.] Devouring bones.
The bore of the gullet is not in all creatures alike answerable to the body or stomach: as in the fox, which feeds on bones, and swallows whole, or with little chewing; and next in a dog and other osstrivorous quadrupeds, it is very large. Derham's Physico-Theol.
O'SSTRARY. n. f. [ossarium, Lat.] A charnel house; a place where the bones of dead people are kept. Diét.
OST. }
OUST. } n. f. A vessel upon which hops or malt are dried. Diét.
OUSTENSIVE. adj. [ostentif, Fr. ostende, Lat.] Showing; betokening.

OST

O'STENT. n. f. [ostentum, Latin.]
1. Appearance; air; manner; mien.
Use all the observance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent.
To please his grandam. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
2. Show; token. These senses are peculiar to Shakespeare.
Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair ostents of love
As shall conveniently become you there. Shakespeare.
3. A portent; a prodigy; any thing ominous.
Latinus, frighted with this dire ostent,
For counsel to his father Faunus went;
And fought the shades renown'd for prophecy,
Which near Alburnia's sulph'rous fountain lie. Dryden.
OSTENTATION. n. f. [ostentatio, Fr. ostentatio, Lat.]
1. Outward show; appearance.
If these shows be not outward, which of you But is four Volcians? —
—March on my fellows;
Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
You are come
A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented
The ostentation of our love. Shakespeare.
2. Ambitious display; boast; vain show. This is the usual sense.
If all these secret springs of distraction fail, yet a vain ostentation of wit sets a man on attacking an established name, and sacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of those about him. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 256.
He knew that good and bountiful minds were sometimes inclined to ostentation, and ready to cover it with pretence of inciting others by their example, and therefore checks this vanity: Take heed, says he, that you do not your alms before men, to be seen. Atterbury.
3. A show; a spectacle. Not in use.
The king would have me present the princess with some delightful ostentation, show, pageant, antic, or firework.
Shakespeare's Love's Lab. Lost.
OSTENTATIOUS. adj. [ostentus, Latin.] Boastful; vain; fond of show; fond to expose to view.
Your modesty is so far from being ostentatious of the good you do, that it blushes even to have it known; and therefore I must leave you to the satisfaction of your own conscience, which, though a silent panegyric, is yet the best. Dryden.
They let Ulysses into his disposition, and he seems to be ignorant, credulous, and ostentatious. Brown on the Odyss.
OSTENTATIOUSLY. adv. [from ostentatious.] Vainly; boastfully.
OSTENTATIOUSNESS. n. f. [from ostentatious.] Vanity; boastfulness.
OSTENTA'TOUR. n. f. [ostentatur, Fr. ostente, Lat.] A boaster;
a vain letter to show.
OSTEO'COLLA. n. f. [ὀστέον and κόλλα; ostecolla, Fr.] Ostecolla is frequent in Germany, and has long been famous for bringing on a callus in fractured bones; but the present practice with us takes no notice of it. Hill's Mat. Med.
Ostecolla is a spar, generally coarse, concreted with earthy or stony matter, precipitated by water, and incrustated upon sticks, bones, and other like bodies. Woodward.
OSTEO'COPE. n. f. [ὀστέον and κόπος; ostecope, Fr.] Pains in the bones, or rather in the nerves and membranes that encompass them. Diét.
OSTEOLOGY. n. f. [ὀστέον and λογία; osteologie, Fr.] A description of the bones.
Richard Farloe, well known for his acuteness in dissection of dead bodies, and his great skill in osteology, has now laid by that practice. Tatler, N^o. 62.
OSTIARY. n. f. [ostium, Lat.] The opening at which a river disembogues itself.
It is generally received, that the Nilus hath seven ostiaries, that is, by seven channels disburtheneth itself unto the sea.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.
O'STLER. n. f. [ostelier, French.] The man who takes care of horses at an inn.
The smith, the ostler, and the boot-catcher, ought to partake. Swift's Direct. to the Groom.
O'STLERY. n. f. [ostelerie, French.] The place belonging to the ostler.
O'STRACISM. n. f. [ὀστρακισμός; ostracisme, Fr.] A manner of passing sentence, in which the note of acquittal or condemnation was marked upon a shell which the voter threw into a vessel. Banishment; public censure.
Virtue in courtiers hearts
Suffers an ostracism, and departs;
Profit, ease, fitness, plenty, bid it go,
But whither, only knowing you, I know. Donne.
Public envy is as an ostracism, that eclipseth men when they grow too great; and therefore it is a bridle to keep them within bounds. Bacon's Essays, N^o. 9.
Hyperbolus by suffering did traduce
The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use. Cleveland.

OTH

This man, upon a slight and false accusation of favouring arbitrary power, was banished by ostracism; which in English would signify, that they voted he should be removed from their presence and council for ever.

Ostracism. n. f. Ostracism expresses the common oyster in its fossil state, under whatever circumstances it has been petrified.

Ostrich. n. f. [ostrich, Fr. struthio, Lat.] Ostrich is ranged among birds. It is very large, its wings very short, and the neck about four or five spans. The feathers of its wings are in great esteem, and are used as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are stained of several colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of course, for they never fly; but use their wings to assist them in running more swiftly. The ostrich swallows bits of iron or brass, in the same manner as other birds will swallow small stones or gravel, to assist in digesting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the sand, and the sun hatches them.

I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.

Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacock? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich.

The Scots errant fight, and fight to eat, Their ostrich stomachs make their swords their meat.

Modern ostriches are dwindled to meek larks, in comparison with those of the ancients.

Ostracism. n. f. [ostracism, Fr.] An instrument to facilitate hearing.

In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is supplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural ostacoustic, is so directed backward, as to receive the faintest and most distant sound that comes behind her.

Ostrich. fran. [ostrich, Sax. ostrich, Fr.]

1. Not the same; not this; different.

Of good actions some are better than other some.

Will it not be received That they have done't?

Who dares receive it other?

He that will not give just occasion to think, that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of beasts, where the strongest carries; and so lay a foundation for perpetual disorder and mischief, tumult, sedition and rebellion; things that the followers of that hypothesis so loudly cry out against, must of necessity find out another state of government.

No leaves shall ever be made other than leaves for years not exceeding thirty-one, in possession, and not in reversion or remainder.

2. Not I, or he, but some one else.

I should cut off the nobles for their lands; Desire his jewels and this other's house.

Physicians are some of them so conformable to the humour of the patient, as they press not the true cure of the disease; and some other are so regular in proceeding according to art, as they respect not the condition of the patient.

The dismayed matrons and maidens, some in their houses, other some in the churches with floods of tears and lamentable cries, poured forth their prayers to the Almighty, craving his help in that their hard distress.

The king had all he crav'd, or could compel, And all was done—let others judge how well.

3. Not the one, not this, but the contrary.

There is that controlling worth in goodness, that the will cannot but like and desire it; and on the other side, that odious deformity in vice, that it never offers itself to the affections of mankind, but under the disguise of the other.

4. Correlative to each.

In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves.

Scotland and thou did each in other live, Nor would'st thou her, nor could she thee survive.

5. Something besides.

The learning of Latin being nothing but the learning of words, join as much other real knowledge with it as you can.

6. The next.

Thou other gold bound brow, is like the first; A third is like the former.

7. The third part.

Bind my hair up: as 'twas yesterday: No, nor the other day.

8. It is sometimes put elliptically for other thing; something different.

I can expect no other from those that judge by single sights and rash measures, than to be thought fond or insolent.

Othergates. adv. [other and gate, for way.] In another manner.

If fir Toby had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did.

Othergates. adv. [other and gate.] This is often mistaken, and sometimes written othergates.

Othergates. adv. [other and where.] In other places.

As Jews they had access to the temple and synagogues, but as Christians they were of necessity forced otherwhere to assemble themselves.

His godlike acts, and his temptations fierce, And former sufferings, otherwhere are found.

Othergates. adv. [other and while.] At other times.

Othergates. adv. [other and wise.] In an indifferent manner.

They only plead, that whatsoever God revealeth, as necessary for all Christian men to do and believe, the same we ought to embrace, whether we have received it by writing or otherwise, which no man denieth.

The whole church hath not tied the parts unto one and the same thing, they being therein left each to their own choice, may either do as others do, or else otherwise, without any breach of duty at all.

In these good things, what all others should practise, we should scarce know to practise otherwise.

Thy father was a worthy prince, And merited, alas! a better fate; But heaven thought otherwise.

2. By other causes.

Sir John Norris failed in the attempts of Liborn, and returned with the loss, by sickness and otherwise, of eight thousand men.

3. In other respects.

It is said truly, that the best men otherwise, are not always the best in regard of society.

Men seldom consider God any otherwise than in relation to themselves, and therefore want some extraordinary benefits to excite their attention and engage their love.

Othergates. n. f. [other, Saxon.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fish.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better swimming, are joined together with a membrane, as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine; and in his tail, which is scaly, or a long taper: so that he may not be unprofitably called putorius aquaticus, or the water pole-cat. He makes himself burrows on the water side, as a beaver; is sometimes tamed and taught, by nimbly surrounding the fishes to drive them into the net.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's skin stuffed with hay.

Would you preserve a numerous finny race? Let your fierce dogs the rav'nous otter chase; Th' amphibious monster ranges all the shores, Darts thro' the waves, and e'er'ly haunt explores.

Oval. adj. [ovale, Fr. ovum, an egg.] Oblong; resembling the longitudinal section of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itself on both sides in an oval figure of an hundred yards.

Mercurius, nearest to the central sun, Does in an oval orbit, circling run; But rarely is the object of our sight, In solar glory sunk.

Oval. n. f. A synonymous word, or a mere negation of the contrary; a translation of the word into another tongue, or a grammatical explication of it, is sometimes sufficient; as a triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the shape of an egg.

Ovarious. adj. [from ovum.] Consisting of eggs.

Dire clinging gathers his ovarious food.

Ovary. n. f. [ovaire, Fr. ovarium, Latin.] The part of the body in which impregnation is performed.

The ovary or part where the white involveth it, is in the second region of the matrix, which is somewhat long and inverted.

Ovation. n. f. [ovation, Fr. ovatio, Lat.] A lesser triumph among the Romans allowed to those commanders who had won a victory without much blood shed, or defeated some less formidable enemy.

Oubats. n. f. A sort of caterpillar; an insect.

Ouch. n. f. An ornament of gold or jewels.

Ouch or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory.

Ouch of a boar. The blow given by a boar's tusk.

Oven. n. f. [open, Saxon.] An arched cavity heated with fire to bake bread.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard, And from his wide devouring oven sent A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard,

Him all amaz'd.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heat of the oven, and the baking.

Bats have been found in ovens and other hollow close places, matted one upon another; and therefore it is likely that they sleep in the winter, and eat nothing.

Oven hath a double signification in the names of places, according to the different situation of them. If the place be upon or near a river, it comes from the Saxon open, a brink or bank; but if there is in the neighbourhood another of the same name, distinguished by the addition of nether, then over is from the Gothic ofan, above.

Oven. prep. [ofan, Gothic; open, Saxon.]

1. Above, with respect to excellence or dignity.

How happy some, over other some can be!

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability; suitable to that state of mediocrity he has placed us in here; wherein to check our over-confidence and presumption, we might, by every day's experience, be made sensible of our shortightedness.

This part of grammar has been much neglected, as some others over-diligently cultivated. It is easy for men to write one after another, of cases and genders.

It is an ill way of establishing this truth, and silencing atheists, to take some men's having that idea of God in their minds, for the only proof of a deity; and out of an over-fondness of that darling invention, cashier all other arguments.

A grown person surfeiting with honey, no sooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries sickness and qualms to his stomach: had this happened to him by an over-dose of honey, when a child, all the same effects would have followed, but the cause would have been mistaken, and the sympathy counted natural.

He over-acted his part; his passions, when once let loose, were too impetuous to be managed.

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby nauseate and grow tired of a particular subject.

The memory of the learner should not be too much crowded with a tumultuous heap of ideas, one idea effaces another. An over-greedy grasp does not retain the largest handful.

To OVER-AROUND. v. n. [over and around.] To abound more than enough.

Both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture over-abound.
The learned, never over-abounding in transitory coin, should not be discontented.

To OVER-ACT. v. a. [over and act.] To act more than enough.

You over-act, when you should underdo:
A little call yourself again, and think.
Princes courts may over-act their reverence, and make themselves laughed at for their foolishness and extravagant relative worship.

Good men often blench the reputation of their piety, by over-acting some things in religion; by an indelicate zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned.

To OVER-ARCH. v. a. [over and reach.] To cover as with an arch.

Where high Ithaca over-looks the floods,
Brown with over-arching shades and pendent woods.
To OVER-AWE. v. a. [over and awe.] To keep in awe by superior influence.

The king was present in person to overlook the magistrates, and to over-awe these subjects with the terror of his sword.

Her graceful innocence, her every air
Of gesture, or least action, over-aw'd
His malice.

I could be content to be your chief tormentor, ever paying you mock reverence, and founding in your ears, the empty title which inspired you with presumption, and over-aw'd my daughter to comply.

A thousand fears

Still over-awe when she appears.

To OVER-BALANCE. v. a. To weigh down; to preponderate.

Not doubting but by the weight of reason I should counterpoise the over-balance of any factions.

The hundred thousand pounds per annum, wherein we over-balance them in trade, must be paid us in money.

When these important considerations are set before a rational being, acknowledging the truth of every article, should a bare single possibility be of weight enough to over-balance them.

OVER-BALANCE. n. f. [over and balance.] Something more than equivalent.

Our exported commodities would, by the return, encrease the treasure of this kingdom above what it can ever be by other means, than a mighty over-balance of our exported to our imported commodities.

The mind should be kept in a perfect indifference, not inclining to either side, any further than the over-balance of probability gives it the turn of assent and belief.

OVER-BATTLE. adj. [Of this word I know not the derivation; batten isto grow fat, and to battle, is at Oxford to feed on trust.] Too fruitful; exuberant.

In the church of God sometimes it cometh to pass, as in over-battle grounds; the fertile disposition whereof is good, yet because it exceedeth due proportion, it bringeth abundantly through too much rankness, things less profitable, whereby that which principally it should yield, being either prevented in place or defrauded of nourishment, faileth.

To OVER-BEAR. v. a. [over and bear.] To repress; to subdue; to whelm; to bear down.
What more savage than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws.

All continent impediment would over-bear,
That did oppose my will.

The ocean over-bear the peering of his lift,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous hafts
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head
Over-bears your officers.

Our counsel, it pleas'd your highness
To over-bear.

Gloster, thou shalt well perceive,
That nor in birth or for authority,
The bishop will be over-borne by thee.

The Turkish commanders, with all their forces, assailed the city, thrusting their men into the breaches by heaps, as if they would, with very multitude, have discouraged or over-born the Christians.

The point of reputation, when news first came of the battle lost, did over-bear the reason of war.

Yet fortune, valour, all is over-born,
By the impetuous torrent.

A body may as well be over-born by the violence of a shallow, rapid stream, as swallowed up in the gulph of smooth water.

Crowding on the last the first impel;
Till over-born with weight the Cyprians fell.

The judgment, if swayed by the over-bearing of passion, and stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, will be erroneous.

Take care that the memory of the learner be not too much crowded with a tumultuous heap, or over-bearing multitude of documents at one time.

The horror or loathsomeness of an object may over-bear the pleasure which results from its greatness, novelty, or beauty.

To OVER-BID. v. a. [over and bid.] To offer more than equivalent.

You have over-bid all my past sufferings,
And all my future too.

To OVER-BLOW. v. n. [over and blow.] To be past its violence.

To OVER-BLOW. v. a. [over and blow.] To drive away as clouds before the wind.

Led with delights, they thus beguile the way,
Until the blustering storm is over-blown.

All those tempests being over-blown, there long after arose a new storm which over-run all Spain.

An easy talk it is to win our own.
Some angel that beholds her there,
Instruct us to record what she was here;
And when this cloud of sorrow's over-blown,
Thro' the wide world we'll make her graces known.

Seiz'd with secret joy,
When storms are over-blown.

To OVER-BOARD. adv. [over and board.] See BOARD.] Off the ship; out of the ship.

The great assembly met again; and now he that was the cause of the tempest being thrown over-board, there were hopes a calm should ensue.

A merchant having a vessel richly fraught at sea in a storm, there is but one certain way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading over-board.

The trembling dotard, to the deck he drew,
And hoisted up and over-board he threw;
This done, he seized the helm.

He obtained liberty to give them only one song before he leaped over-board, which he did, and then plunged into the sea.

Though great ships were commonly bad sea-boats, they had a superior force in a sea engagement: the shock of them being sometimes so violent, that it would throw the crew on the upper deck of lesser ships over-board.

To OVER-BULK. v. a. [over and bulk.] To oppress by bulk.

The feeding pride,
In rank Achilles, must or now be cropt,
Or shedding, breed a nursery of like evils,
To over-bulk us all.

To OVER-BURDEN. v. a. [over and burden.] To load with too great weight.

If she were not cloyed with his company, and that she thought not the earth over-burdened with him, she would cool his fiery grief.

To OVER-BUY. v. a. [over and buy.] To buy too dear.

He, when want requires, is only wife,
Who lights not foreign aids, nor over-buys;
But on our native strength, in time of need, relies.

To OVER-CARRY. v. a. [over and carry.] To hurry too far; to be urged to any thing violent or dangerous.

He was the king's uncle, but yet of no capacity to succeed; by reason whereof his natural affection and duty was left easy to be over-carried by ambition.

To OVER-CAST. v. a. part. over-cast. [over and cast.] To cloud; to darken; to cover with gloom.

The day with clouds was sudden over-cast.
Hie, Robin, over-cast the night;
The starry welkin cover thou anon,

With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron.
Our days of age are sad and over-cast, in which we find that of all our vain passions and affections past, the sorrow only abideth.

I of fumes and humid vapours made,
No cloud in so serene a mansion find,
To over-cast her ever-shining mind.

Those clouds that over-cast our morn shall fly,
Dispell'd to farthest corners of the sky.

The dawn is over-cast, the morning lours,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day.

To OVER-CAST. v. a. part. over-cast. [over and cast.] To cover. This sense is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is incircled with a thread, over-cast.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the suspicion of an evil intent, the colour where-with it over-casts itself is always a fair and plausible pretence of seeking to further that which is good.

Their arms abroad with gray mists over-cast,
And their green leaves trembling with every blast.

countries so over-flown, still situate between the tropicks?

Sixteen hundred and odd years after the earth was made, it was over-flowed and destroyed in a deluge of water, that overspread the face of the whole earth, from pole to pole, and from east to west.

This oft by mariners are shewn,
Earl Godwin's castles over-flown.
Over-flow. n. f. [over and flow.] Inundation; more than fulness; such a quantity as runs over; exuberance.

Did he break out into tears?
In great measure—

—A kind over-flow of kindness.
Where there are great over-flows in fens, the drowning of them in winter maketh the summer following more fruitful; for that it keepeth the ground warm.

It requires pains to find the coherence of abstruse writings: so that it is not to be wondered, that St. Paul's epistles have, with many, passed rather for disjointed pious discourses, full of warmth and zeal and over-flows of light, rather than for calm, strong, coherent reasonings all through.

After every over-flow of the Nile, there was not always a mensuration.

If this signifies not the expression, it may be ascribed to an over-flow of gratitude in the general disposition of Ulysses.

Over-flowing. n. f. [from over-flow.] Exuberance; copiousness.

When men are young, they might vent the over-flowings of their fancy that way.

When the over-flowings of ungodliness make us afraid, the ministers of religion cannot better discharge their duty of opposing it.

Over-flowingly. adv. [from over-flowing.] Exuberantly; in great abundance. A word not elegant nor in use.

Nor was it his indignance that forced him to make the world; but his goodness pressed him to impart the goods which he so over-flowingly abounds with.

To Over-fly. v. a. [over and fly.] To cross by flight.

Can scarce o'er-fly them in a day and night.

Over-forwardness. n. f. [over and forwardness.] Too great quickness; too great readiness.

By an over-forwardness in courts to give countenance to frivolous exceptions, though they make nothing to the true merit of the cause, it often happens that causes are not determined according to their merits.

To Over-freight. v. a. pret. over-freighted; part. over-fraught. [over and freight.] To load too heavily; to fill with too great quantity.

A boat over-freighted with people, in rowing down the river, was, by the extreme weather, sunk.

Grief, that does not speak,
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart and bids it break.

Sorrow has to o'er-fraught
This sinking barque, I shall not live to shew
How I abhor my first rash crime.

To Over-get. v. a. [over and get.] To reach; to come up with.

With six hours hard riding, through so wild places, as it was rather the cunning of my horse sometimes, than of myself, so rightly to hit the way, I over-got them a little before night.

To Over-glance. v. a. [over and glance.] To look hastily over.

I have, but with a curious eye,
O'er-glanc'd the articles.

Over-go. v. a. [over and go.] To surpass; to excel.

Thinking it beyond the degree of humanity to have a wit so far over-going his age, and such dreadful terror proceed from so excellent beauty.

Great nature hath laid down at last,
That mighty birth wherewith so long he went,
And over-went the times of ages past.

Here to lye in upon our soft content.

To Over-gorge. v. a. [over and gorge.] To gorge too much.

Art thou grown great,
And, like ambitious Sylla, over-gorg'd.

Over-great. adj. [over and great.] Too great.

Though putting the mind unprepared upon an unusual stress ought to be avoided; yet this must not run it, by an over-great shyness of difficulties, into a lazy sauntering about obvious things.

To Over-grow. v. a. [over and grow.]

1. To cover with growth.

Roof and floor, and walls were all of gold,
But over-grown with dust and old decay,
And hid in darkness that none could behold
The hue thereof.

Him for a happy man I own,
Whose fortune is not over-grown.

Over-growth. n. f. [over and growth.] Exuberant growth.

The over-growth of some complexion,
Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reason.

The fortune in being the first in an invention, doth cause sometimes a wonderful over-growth in riches.

Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks
To stop their over-growth, as in-mate guests Too numerous.

To Over-hale. v. a. [over and hale.]

1. To spread over.

The welked Phebus gan avail
His weary wain, and now the frosty night
Her mantle black thro' heaven gan over-hale.

2. To examine over again: as, he over-haled my account.

To Over-hang. v. a. [over and hang.] To jut over; to impend over.

Lend the eye a terrible aspect,
Let the brow overwhelm it,
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'er-hang and jutty his confounded base.

Hide me ye forests, in your closest bow'rs,
Where flows the murm'ring brook, inviting dreams,
Where bord'ring hazel over-hangs the streams.

If you drink tea upon a promontory that over-hangs the sea, it is preferable to an assembly.

To Over-hang. v. n. To jut over.

The reef was craggy cliff, that over-hung
Still as it rose, impellible to climb.

To Over-harden. v. a. [over and harden.] To make too hard.

By laying it in the air, it has acquired such a hardness, that it was brittle like over-hardened steel.

Over-head. adv. [over and head.] Aloft; in the zenith; above; in the ceiling.

He over-hent nought moved with her piteous look.

To Over-joy. v. a. [over and joy.] To transport; to ravish.

He that puts his confidence in God only, is neither over-joyed in any great good things of this life, nor sorrowful for a little thing.

The bishop, partly astonished and partly over-joyed with these speeches, was struck into a sad silence for a time.

This love-sick virgin, over-joy'd to find
The boy alone; still follow'd him behind.

Over-joy. n. f. Transport; ecstacy.

The mutual conference that my mind hath had,
Makes me the bolder to salute my king
With ruder terms; such as my wit affords,
And over-joy of heart doth minister.

To Over-ripen. v. a. [over and ripen.] To make too ripe.

OVE

Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn,
Hanging the head with Ceres' plenteous load?

To Overlabour. v. a. [over and labour.] To take too much pains on any thing; to harass with toil.

She without noise will over-see
His children and his family;
And order all things till he come,
Sweaty and over-labour'd home.

To Overlade. v. a. [over and lade.] To over-burthen.

Thus to throng and over-lade a soul
With love, and then to have a room for fear,
That shall all that controul,
What is it but to rear

Our passions and our hopes on high,
That thence they may delir

The noblest way how to despair and die?

Overlarge. adj. [over and large.] Larger than enough.

Our attainments cannot be over-large, and yet we manage a narrow fortune very unthrifly.

Overlashingly. n. f. [over and lash.] With exaggeration.

A mean word, now obsolete.

Although I be far from their opinion who write too over-lashingly, that the Arabian tongue is in use in two third parts of the inhabited world, yet I find that it extendeth where the religion of Mahomet is professed.

To Overlay. v. a. [over and lay.]

1. To oppress by too much weight or power.

Some commons are barren, the nature is such,
And some over-lyeth the commons too much.

Not only that mercy which keepeth from being over-laid and opprest, but mercy which keepeth from being touched with grievous miseries.

When any country is over-laid by the multitude which live upon it, there is a natural necessity compelling it to dis-burthen itself and lay the load upon others.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and over-laid by the other.

Good laws had been antiquated by the course of time, or over-laid by the corruption of manners.

Our fine have over-laid our hopes.

The strong Emectric came in Arctic's aid,
And Palamon with odds was over-laid.

2. To smother with too much or too close covering.

Nor then destroys it with too fond a flay,
Like mothers, which their infants over-lay.

3. To smother; to crush; to overwhelm.

Ships burnt in fight, or forc'd on rocky shores,
The new-born babes by nurces over-laid.

They quickly stifled and over-laid those infant principles, of piety and virtue, sown by God in their hearts; so that they brought a voluntary darkness and stupidity upon their minds.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her insipid soul for Ptolemy:

A heavy lump of earth without desire,
A heap of allies that o'er-lays your fire.

The stars, no longer over-laid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mafs,

And upward shoot.

Season the passions of a child with devotion, which seldom dies; though it may seem extinguished for a while, it breaks out as soon as misfortunes have brought the man to himself.

The fire may be covered and over-laid, but cannot be entirely quenched and smothered.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust to the fund of their own reason, advanced but not over-laid by commerce with books.

4. To cloud; to over-cast.

Phæbus' golden face it did attain,
As when a cloud his beams doth over-lay.

5. To cover superficially.

The over-laying of their chapters was of silver, and all the pillars were filleted with silver.

By his prescript a sanctuary is fram'd
Of cedar, over-laid with gold.

6. To join by something laid over.

Thou art impower'd
To fortify thus far, and over-lay,
With this portentous bridge, the dark abyss.

To Overleap. v. a. [over and leap.] To pass by a jump.

A step
On which I must fall down or else o'er-leap,
For in my way it lies.

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land;
If daring ships and men prophane,
Th' eternal fences over-leap.

And pass at will the boundless deep.

OVE

Overleather. n. f. [over and leather.] The part of the shoe that covers the foot.

I have sometimes more feet than shoes; or such shoes as my toes look through the over-leather.

Overlight. n. f. [over and light.] Too strong light.

An over-light maketh the eyes dark, inasmuch as perpetual looking against the sun would cause blindness.

To Overlive. v. a. [over and live.] To live longer than another; to survive; to out-live.

Mufidorus, who shewed a mind not to over-live Pyrocles, prevailed.

He concludes in hearty prayers,
That your attempts may over-live the hazard
And fearful meeting of their opposite.

They over-lived that envy, and had their pardons afterwards.

To Overlive. v. n. To live too long.

Why do I over-live?
Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
To deathless pain?

Overliver. n. f. [from over-live.] Survivor; that which lives longest.

A peace was concluded, to continue for both the kings lives, and the over-liver of them.

To Overload. v. a. [over and load.] To burthen with too much.

The memory of youth is charged and over-loaded, and all they learn is meer jargon.

Overlong. adj. [over and long.] Too long.

I have transgressed the laws of oratory, in making my periods and parentheses over-long.

To Overlook. v. a. [over and look.]

1. To view from a higher place.

The pile o'er-look'd the town, and drew the fight,
Surpris'd at once with reverence and delight.

I will do it with the same respect to him, as if he were alive, and over-looking my paper while I write.

2. To view fully; to peruse.

Wou'd I had o'er-look'd the letter.

3. To superintend; to over-see.

He was present in person to over-look the magistrates, and to over-awe those subjects with the terror of his sword.

In the greater out parishes many of the poor parishioners through neglect do perish, for want of some heedful eye to over-look them.

4. To review.

The time and care that are required,
To over-look and file, and polish well,
Fright poets from that necessary toil.

5. To pass by indulgently.

This part of good-nature which consists in the pardoning and over-looking of faults, is to be exercised only in doing ourselves justice in the ordinary commerce of life.

In vain do we hope that God will over-look such high contradiction of sinners, and pardon offences committed against the plain convictions of conscience.

6. To neglect; to slight.

Of the two relations, Christ over-looked the meaner, and entitled and denominated them solely from the more honourable.

To over-look the entertainment before him, and languish for that which lies out of the way, is sickly and servile.

The suffrage of our poet laureat should not be over-looked.

Religious fear, when produced by just apprehensions of a divine power, naturally over-looks all human greatness that stands in competition with it, and extinguishes every other terror.

The happiest of mankind, over-looking those solid blessings which they already have, set their hearts upon somewhat they want.

They over-look truth in the judgments they pass on adversity and prosperity. The temptations that attend the former they can easily see, and dread at a distance; but they have no apprehensions of the dangerous consequences of the latter.

Overlooker. n. f. [over and look.]

The original word signifies an over-looker, or one who stands higher than his fellows and over-looks them.

Overloop. n. f. The same with orlop.

In extremity we carry our ordnance better than we were wont, because our nether over-loops are raised commonly from the water; to wit, between the lower part of the port and the sea.

Overmastered. adj. [over and master.] Having too much maff.

Cloanthus better mann'd, purld him fail,
But his o'er-mast'd gally check'd his haste.

To Overmaster. v. a. [over and master.] To subdue; to govern.

For your desire to know what is between us,
O'er-master it as you may.

OVE

So sleeps a pilot, whose poor bark is prest
With many a merciless o'er-mast'ring wave. Crafhaw.
Over-mast'ring with a score of drunkards, the only soldiery left about them, or else to comply with all rapines and violences. Milton on Education.
To OVERMA'TCH. v. a. [over and match.] To be too powerful; to conquer; to oppress by superior force.
I have seen a swan
With bootless labour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves. Shaksp.
Sir William Lucy, with me
Set from out o'er-match'd forces forth for aid. Shaksp.
Affixt, left I who erst
Thought none my equal, now be over-match'd. Par. Reg.
How great soever our curiosity be, our excess is greater, and does not only over-match, but supplant it. Dec. of Piety.
He from that length of time dire omens drew,
Of English over-match'd, and Dutch too strong,
Who never fought three days but to pursue. Dryden.
It moves our wonder, that a foreign guest
Should over-match the most, and match the best. Dryden.
To OVERMA'TCH. n. f. [over and match.] One of superior powers;
one not to be overcome.
Spain is no over-match for England, by that which leadeth all men; that is, experience and reason. Bacon.
Eve was his over-match, who self-deceiv'd
And rashly, before-hand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with or his own. Milton.
In a little time there will scarce be a woman of quality in Great-Britain, who would not be an over-match for an Irish priest. Addison's Preacher, No. 89.
To OVER-MEASURE. n. f. [over and measure.] Something given over the due measure.
To OVER-MIX. v. a. [over and mix.] To mix with too much.
Those things these parts o'er-mix, no joys shall know,
Or little pleasure over-mix with woe. Crech.
To OVERMOST. adj. [over and most.] Highest; over the rest in authority. Ans.
To OVERMUCH. adj. [over and much.] Too much; more than enough.
It was the custom of those former ages, in their over-much gratitude, to advance the first authors of any useful discovery among the number of their gods. Wilkins.
An over-much use of salt, besides that it occasions thirst and over-much drinking, has other ill effects. Locke.
To OVERMUCH. adv. In too great a degree.
The fault which we find in them is, that they over-much abridge the church of her power in these things. Whereupon they re-charge us, as if in these things we gave the church a liberty which hath no limits or bounds. Hosker.
Perhaps
I also erred, in over-much admiring
What seem'd in thee so perfect, that I thought
No evil durst attempt thee. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
Deject not then so over-much thyself,
Who hast of sorrow thy full load besides, Milton.
To OVERMUCH. n. f. More than enough.
By attributing over-much to things
Let's excellent, as thou thyself perceiv'st. Milton.
With respect to the blessings the world enjoys, even good men may ascribe over-much to themselves. Grew.
To OVERMUCHNESS. n. f. [from over-much.] Exuberance; superabundance.
There are words that do as much raise a file, as others can depress it; superabundance and over-muchness amplifies. It may be above faith, but not above a mean. Ben. Johnson.
To OVERNIGHT. n. f. [over and night.] This seems to be used by Shakespeare as a noun, but by Addison more properly, as I have before plac'd it, as a noun with a preposition. Night before bed-time.
If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been o'er'taken. Shakespeare.
Will confesses, that for half his life his head ached every morning with reading men over-night. Addison.
To OVERNAME. v. a. [over and name.] To name in a series.
Over-name them; and as thou namest them I will describe them. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.
To OVEROFFICE. v. a. [over and office.] To lord by virtue of an office.
This might be the fate of a politician which this over- office. Shaksp. Hamlet.
To OVEROFFICIOUS. adj. [over and officious.] Too busy; too importunate.
This is an over-officious truth, and is always at a man's heels; so that if he looks about him, he must take notice of
it. Collier on Human Reason.
To OVERPASS. v. a. [over and pass.]
1. To cross.
I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs o'er-pass,

OVE

When on a sudden Torrifmond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er. Dryden.
What have my Scyllas and my Syrtis done,
When these they o'er-pass, and those they thum? Dryden.
2. To over-look; to pass with disregard.
The complaint about palms and hymns might as well be over-pass without any answer, as it is without any cause brought forth. Hosker, b. v. f. 37.
Remember that Pellean conqueror,
A youth, how all the beauties of the east
He slightly view'd, and slightly over-pass'd. Milton.
3. To omit in a reckoning.
Arithmetical progression demonstrates how fast mankind would increase, over-passing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years, from seventy to sixty thousand able men. Raleigh.
4. To omit; not to receive.
If the grace of him which saveth over-pass some, so that the prayer of the church for them be not received, this we may leave to the hidden judgments of righteousness. Hosker.
To OVERPASS. part. adj. [from over-pass.] Gone; past.
What canst thou swear by now?—
—By time to come,—
That thou hast wronged in the time o'er-pass. Shaksp.
To OVERPAY. v. a. [over and pay.] To reward beyond the price.
Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will over-pay, and pay again, Shakespeare.
When I have found it.
You have yourself, your kindness over-paid,
He ceases to oblige who can upbraid. Dryden.
Wilt thou with pleasure hear thy lover's strains,
And with one heav'ly smile o'er-pay his pains. Prior.
To OVERPERCH. n. f. [over and perch.] To fly over.
With love's light wings did I o'er-perch these walls,
For stony limits cannot hold love out. Shaksp.
To OVERPEER. v. a. [over and peer.] To over-look; to hover above. It is now out of use.
The ocean over-peering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'er-bears your officers. Shaksp. Hamlet.
Your Argosies with portly fail,
Do over-peer the petty traffickers,
That curtsy to them, do them reverence. Shaksp.
Mountainous error would be too highly heapt,
For truth to o'er-peer. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose top branch o'er-peer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'ful wind. Shaksp.
They are invincible by reason of the over-peering mountains that back the one, and slender fortifications of the other to land-ward. Sandy's Journey.
To OVERPLUS. n. f. [over and plus.] Surplus; what remains more than sufficient.
Some other sinners there are, from which that overplus of strength in persuasion doth arise. Hosker's Pref.
A great deal too much of it was made, and the overplus remained still in the mortar. L'Estrange.
It would look like a fable to report, that this gentleman gives away all which is the overplus of a great fortune. Add.
To OVERPLY. v. a. [over and ply.] To employ too laboriously.
What supports me, dost thou ask?
The confidence, friend, I have lost them over-plied.
In liberty's defence. Milton's Penn.
To OVERPOISE. v. a. [over and poise.] To outweigh.
Whether cripples who have lost their thighs will float; their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others over-poised by the hinder legs; we have not made experiment. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. iv.
The scale
O'er-weigh'd by darkness, lets the night prevail;
And days, that lengthen'd in the summer's height,
Shortens till winter, and is lost in night. Crech.
To OVERPOISE. n. f. [from the verb.] Preponderant weight.
Horace, in his first and second book of odes, was still ri-fing, but came not to his meridian till the third. After which his judgment was an over-poise to his imagination.
He grew too cautious to be bold enough, for he descended in his fourth by flow degrees. Dryden.
Some over-poise of sway, by turns they share,
In peace the people, and the prince in war. Dryden.
To OVERPOWER. v. a. [over and power.] To be predominant over; to oppress by superiority.
Now in danger try'd, now known in arms
Not to be over-power'd. Milt. Par. Lost.
As much light over-powers the eye, so they who have weak eyes, when the ground is covered with snow, are wont to complain of too much light. Boyle.
Reason allows none to be confident, but him only who governs

OVE

governs the world, who knows all things, and can do all things; and therefore can neither be surpris'd nor over-powered.
things; and therefore can neither be surpris'd nor over-powered.
South's Sermons.
After the death of Crassus, Pompey found himself outwitted by Cæsar; he broke with him, over-powered him in the senate, and caused many unjust decrees to pass against him. Dryden's Dedicat. to Æneid.
Inspiration is, when such an over-powering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it. Watts's Legick.
The historian makes these mountains the standards of the rise of the water; which they could never have been, had they not been standing, when it did so rise and over-power the earth. Woodw. Nat. Hist.
To OVERPRESS. v. a. [over and press.] To bear upon with irrefragable force; to overwhelm; to crush.
Having an excellent horse under him, when he was over- pressed by some, he avoided them. Sidney.
Michael's arm main promontories flung,
And over-press'd whole legions weak with sin. Roscomm.
When a prince enters on a war, he ought maturely to consider whether his coffers be full, his people rich by a long peace and free trade, not over-press'd with many bur-thenome taxes. Swift.
To OVERPRIZE. v. a. [over and prize.] To value at too high price.
Parents over-prize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection. Watson.
To OVERRANK. n. f. [over and rank.] Too rank.
It produces over-rank binds. Martinet's Husbandry.
To OVERRATE. v. a. [over and rate.] To rate at too much.
While vain shows and fencies you over-rate,
'Tis to be fear'd,
That as a fire the former house o'erthrew,
Machines and tempests will destroy the new. Dryden.
To avoid the temptations of poverty, it concerns us not to over-rate the conveniences of our station, and in estimating the proportion fit for us, to fix it rather too low than too high; for our desires will be proportioned to our wants, real or imaginary, and our temptations to our desires.
Rogers.
To OVERREACH. v. a. [over and reach.]
1. To rise above.
The mountains of Olympus, Atho and Atlas, over-reach and surmount all winds and clouds. Raleigh.
Sixteen hundred years after the earth was made, it was overflowed in a deluge of water in such excess, that the floods over-reach'd the tops of the highest mountains. Burnet.
2. To deceive; to go beyond; to circumvent. A sagacious man is said to have a long reach.
What more cruel than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws whereunto he should be subject. Hosker, b. v. f. 2.
I have laid my brain in the sun and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross over-reaching. Shaksp.
Shame to be overcome, or over-reach'd,
Would utmost vigour raise, and rais'd unite. Milton.
A man who had been matchless held
In cunning, over-reach'd where least he thought,
To save his credit, and for very spite
Still will be tempting him who foils him still. Milton.
There is no pleasanter encounter than a trial of skill betwixt sharpers to over-reach one another. L'Estrange.
Forbidding, oppression, defrauding and over-reaching one another, perfidiousness and treachery. Tillotson.
Such a principle is ambition, or a desire of fame, by which many vicious men are over-reach'd, and engaged contrary to their natural inclinations in a glorious and laudable course of action. Addison's Spectator, No. 255.
John had got an impression that Lewis was so deadly cunning a man, that he was afraid to venture himself alone with him; at last he took heart of grace; let him come up, quoth he, it is but flicking to my point, and he can never over- reach me. History of J. Bull.
To OVERREACH. v. n. A horse is said to over-reach, when he brings his hinder feet too far forwards, and strikes his toes against his fore shoes. Farr. Dict.
To OVERREACHER. n. f. [from over-reach.] A cheat; a deceiver.
To OVERREAD. v. a. [over and read.] To peruse.
The contents of this is the return of the duke; you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure. Shakespeare.
To OVERRED. v. a. [over and red.] To smear with red.
Prick thy face and over-red thy fear,
Thou lily liver'd boy. Shaksp. Macbeth.
To OVERROAST. v. a. [over and roast.] To roast too much.
I was burnt and dried away,
And better twere, that both of us did fast,
Since of ourselves, ourselves are choleric,
Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh. Shaksp.

OVE

To OVERRULE. v. a. [over and rule.]
1. To influence with predominant power; to be superior in authority.
Which humour perceiving to over-rule me, I strive against
it. Sidney.
That which the church by her ecclesiastical authority shall probably think and desire to be true or good, must in con-gruity of reason over-rule all other inferior arguments whatsoever. Hosker, b. v. f. 8.
Except our own private, and but probable resolutions, be by the law of publick determinations over-ruled, we take away all possibility of sociable life in the world. Hooker.
What if they be such as will be over-ruled with some one, whom they dare not displease. Whitgift.
So much his passion and animosity over-ruled his conscience.
Clarendon, b. viii.
A wife man shall over-rule his stars, and have a greater influence upon his own content, than all the constellations and planets of the firmament. Taylor.
He is acted by a passion which absolutely over-rules him;
and so can no more recover himself, than a bowl rolling down an hill stop itself in the midst of its career. South.
'Tis temerity for men to venture their lives upon unequal encounters; unless where they are obliged by an over-ruling impulse of conscience and duty. L'Estrange.
A man may, by the influence of an over-ruling planet, be inclined to lust, and yet by the force of reason overcome that bad influence. Swift.
2. To govern with high authority; to superintend.
Wherefore does he not now come forth and openly over- rule, as in other matters he is accustomed? Hayward.
3. To supercede: as in law to over-rule a plea is to reject it as incompetent.
Thirty acres make a farthing land, nine farthings a Cornith acre, and four Cornith acres a knights fee. But this rule is over-ruled to a greater or lesser quantity, according to the fruitfulness or barrenness of the soil. Cervus.
To OVERRUN. v. a. [over and run.]
1. To harraß by incursions; to ravage; to rove over in a hostile manner.
Those barbarous nations that over-ran the world, possessed those dominions, whereof they are now so called. Spenser.
Till the tears she shed,
Like envious floods o'er-ran her lovely face, Shaksp.
They cry, who count it glorious to subdue
By conquest far and wide, to over-run
Large countries, and in field great battles win, Great cities by assault. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The nine
Their fainting foes to shameful flight compell'd,
And with restless force o'er-ran the field. Dryden.
Gustavus Adolphus could not enter this part of the empire after having over-run most of the rest. Addison.
A commonwealth may be over-run by a powerful neighbour, which may produce bad consequences upon your trade and liberty. Swift's Miscel.
2. To out-run.
Pyrocles being come to sixteen, over-run his age in growth, strength, and all things following it, that not Mulidorus could perform any action on horse or foot more strongly, or deliver that strength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuously. Sidney, b. ii.
We may out-run
By violent swiftness, that which we run at.
And lose by over-running. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
Ahimaz ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Cush.
2 Sam. xviii. 23.
Galileus noth, that if an open trough, wherein water is, be driven faster than the water can follow, the water ga-thereth upon an heap towards the hinder end, where the motion began; which he supposeth, holding confidently the motion of the earth to be the cause of the ebbing and flowing of the ocean; because the earth *over-runne*th the water.
Bacon's Nat. History.
3. To overspread; to cover all over.
With an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place. Nab. i. 8.
This disposition of the elements and the parts of the earth, flows us the footsteps of some kind of ruin which happened in such a way, that at the same time a general flood of waters would necessarily over-run the whole earth.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. To mischief by great numbers; to pester.
To flatter foolish men into a hope of life where there is none, is much the same with betraying people into an opinion, that they are in a virtuous and happy state, when they are over-run with passion and drowned in their lusts. L'Estrange.
Were it not for the incessant labours of this industrious animal, Egypt would be over-run with crocodiles. Addison.
Such provision made, that a country should not want springs as were convenient for it; nor be over-run with them, and afford little or nothing else; but a supply every where suitable to the necessities of each climate and region of the globe. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

OVE

5. To injure by treading down.
His tears defac'd the surface of the well,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'er-run with wrinkles and deform'd with tears. Addison.

6. Among printers, to be obliged to change the disposition of the lines and words in correcting, by reason of the inferences.
To OVERRUN. v. n. To overflow; to be more than full.
Though you have left me,
Yet still my soul o'er-runs with fondness towards you. Smith.
Cattle in inclosures shall always have fresh pasture, that now is all trampled and over-run. Spenser.

To OVERSE. v. a. [over and see.]
1. To superintend; to overlook.
He had charge my discipline to frame,
And tutors nourish to oversee. Fairy Queen.
She without noise will oversee
His children and his family. Dryden.

2. To overlook; to pass by unheeded; to omit.
I who resolve to oversee
No lucky opportunity,
Will go to council to advise
Which way 't encounter, or surprize. Had. p. iii.

OVERSEEN. part. [from oversee.] Mistaken; deceived.
A common received error is never utterly overthrown, till such times as we go from signs unto causes, and shew some manifest root or fountain thereof common unto all, whereby it may clearly appear how it hath come to pass that so many have been overseen. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.

They rather observed what he had done, and suffered for the king and for his country, without farther enquiring what he had omitted to do, or been overseen in doing. Clarend.

OVERSEER. n. f. [from oversee.]
1. One who overlooks; a superintendent.
There are in the world certain overseers of all books, whose censure, in this respect, would fall sharp on us. Hooker, b. v. f. 31.

Jehiel and Azariah were overseers under Cononiah. 2 Chron. xxxi. 13.

To entertain a guest, with what a care
Wou'd he his household ornaments prepare;
Harrahs his servants, and as overseer stand,
To keep them working with a threatening wand.
Clean all my plate, he cries. Dryden.

2. An officer who has the care of the parochial provision for the poor.
The church-wardens and overseers of the poor might find it possible to discharge their duties, whereas now in the greater out-parishes many of the poorer parishioners, through neglect, do perish for want of some heedful eye to overlook them. Grant's Bills of Mort.

To OVERSET. v. a. [over and set.]
1. To turn the bottom upwards; to throw off the basis.
The tempests met,
The failors masted, and the ship o'er-set. Dryden.
It is forced through the hiatus's at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible perturbation, even when there is not the least breath of wind; over-setting ships in the harbours, and sinking them. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

Would the confederacy exert itself, as much to annoy the enemy, as they do for their defence, we might bear them down with the weight of our armies, and over-set the whole power of France. Addison on the War.

2. To throw out of regularity.
His action against Catiline ruined the consul, when it saved the city; for it so swelled his soul, that ever afterwards it was apt to be over-set with vanity. Dryden.

To OVERSET. v. n. To fall off the basis.
Part of the weight will be under the axle-tree, which will so far counterpoise what is above it, that it will very much prevent the over-setting. Martimo's Hist.

To OVERSHADE. v. a. [over and shade.] To cover with any thing that causes darkness.
Black night o'er-shade thy day, and death thy life. Shakefp.
Dark cloudy death o'er-shades his beams of life,
And he nor sees, nor hears us. Shakefp.
No great and mighty subject might eclipse or over-shade the imperial power. Bacon.

If a wood of leaves o'er-shade the tree,
In vain the hind shall vex the threshing floor,
For empty chaff and straw will be thy store. Dryden.
Should we mix our friendly talk,
O'er-shaded in that favorite walk;
Both pleas'd with all we thought we wanted. Prior.

To OVERSHADOW. v. a. [over and shadow.]
1. To throw a shadow over any thing.
Wheels chok'd and over-shadow the corn, and bear it down, or starve and deplete it of nourishment. Bacon.

OVE

Death,
Let the damps of thy dull breath
Over-shadow even the shade,
And make darkness self afraid. Crahaun.

Darkness must over-shadow all his bounds,
Palpable darkness, and blot out three days. Milton.

2. To shelter; to protect; to cover with superiour influence.
My over-shadowing spirit and might, with thee
I fend along: ride forth and bid the deep Within appointed bounds. Milton's Par. Lost.

On her should come
The holy ghost, and the power of the highest O'er-shadow her. Paradise Regain'd, b. i.

To OVERSHOOT. v. n. [over and shoot.] To fly beyond the mark.
Often it drops, or over-shoots by the disproportions of distance or application.
To OVERSHOOT. v. a.
1. To shoot beyond the mark.
Every inordinate appetite defeats its own satisfaction, by over-shooting the mark it aims at. Tillotson.

2. [With the reciprocal pronoun.] To venture too far; to assert too much.
Leave it to themselves to consider, whether they have in this point or not over-shot themselves; which God doth know is quickly done, even when our meaning is most sincere. Hooker, b. ii. f. 8.

In finding fault with the laws I doubt me, you shall much over-shoot yourself, and make me the more dislike your other dislikes of that government. Spenser on Ireland.

For any thing that I can learn of them, you have over-shot yourself in reckoning. Whitegift.

OVERSIGHT. n. f. [from over and sight.]
1. Superintendence.
They gave the money, being told unto them that had the over-sight of the house. 2 Kings xii. 11.

Feed the flock of God, taking the over-sight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly. 1 Pet. v. 2.

2. Mistake; error.
Amongst so many huge volumes, as the infinite pains of St. Augustine have brought forth, what one hath gotten greater love, commendation, and honour, than the book wherein he carefully owns his over-sights and sincerely condemneth them. Hooker's Pref.

His son mark'd this over-sight,
And then mistook reverse of wrong for right. Pope.

To OVERSIZE. v. a. [over and size.]
1. To surpass in bulk.
Those bred in a mountainous country, over-size those that dwell on low levels. Sandys Journey.

2. [over and size, a compost with which masons cover walls.] To plaster over.
He thus o'er-sized with coagulate gore,
Old grandfire Priam seeks. Shakefp. Hamlet.

To OVERSKIP. v. a. [over and skip.]
1. To pass by leaping.
Presume not ye that are sheep, to make yourselves guides of them that should guide you; neither seek ye to over-skip the fold, which they about you have pitched. Hooker.

2. To pass over.
Mark if to get them the o'er-skip the rest,
Mark if she read them twice, or kiss the name. Donne.

3. To escape.
When that hour o'er-skips me in the day,
Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy sake;
The next ensuing hour some foul mischance Torment me. Shakefp. Two Gent. of Verona.

Who alone suffers, suffers most 't the mind;
But then the mind much sufferance does o'er-skip,
When grief hath mates and bearing fellowship. Shakefp.

To OVERSLEEP. v. a. [over and sleep.] To sleep too long.
To OVERSLIP. v. a. [over and slip.] To pass undone, unnoticed, or unused; to neglect.
The carelessness of the justices in imposing this rate, or the negligence of the constables in collecting it, or the backwardness of the inhabitants in paying the same, over-slipped the time. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

It were injurious to over-slip a noble act in the duke during this employment, which I must celebrate above all his expenses. Wotton.

To OVERSNOW. v. a. [over and snow.] To cover with snow.
These I wielded while my bloom was warm,
Ere age unstring my nerves, or time o'er-snow'd my head. Dryden's Enri.

OVERSOULD. part. [from oversell.] Sold at too high a price.
Life with ease I can disclaim,
And think it over-sold to purchase fame. Dryden.

OVERSOON. adv. [over and soon.] Too soon.
The lad may prove well enough, if he over-soon think not too well of himself, and will bear away that he heareth of his elders. Sidney, b. ii.

OVE

OVERSPENT. part. [over and spend.] Wearied; harrassed; forspent. The verb overspend is not used.
Theftylis, wild thyme, and garlick beats,
For harvest-hinds, o'er-spent with toil and heats. Dryden.

To OVERSPREAD. v. a. [over and spread.] To cover over; to fill; to scatter over.
Whether they were Spaniards, Gauls, Africans, Gothes,
Some other which did overspread all christendom, it is impossible to affirm. Spenser.

Of the three sons of Noah was the whole earth overspread. Gen. ix. 19.

Darkness Europe's face did overspread,
From lazy cells, where superstition bred.
Not a deluge that only over-run some particular region;
but that overspread the face of the whole earth from pole to pole, and from east to west. Burnet.

To OVERSTAND. v. a. [over and stand.] To stand too much upon conditions.
Her's they shall be, since you refuse the price;
What madman would o'er-stand his market twice. Dryd.

To OVERSTARE. v. a. [over and stare.] To stare wildly.
Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buskin, or an overstaring frowned head. Ascham.

To OVERSTOCK. v. a. [over and stock.] To fill too full; to crowd.
If railery had entered the old Roman coins, we should have been overstocked with medals of this nature. Addison.

Some bishop, not overstocked with relations, or attached to favourites, bestows some inconsiderable benefice. Swift.

Since we are so bent upon enlarging our flocks, it may be worth enquiring what we shall do with our wool, in case Barnstable should be ever overstocked. Swift.

To OVERSTOKE. v. a. [over and stoke.] To stoke with too much. Fishes are more numerous than beasts or birds, as appears by their numerous spawn; and if all these should come to maturity, even the ocean itself would have been long since overstoked with fish. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To OVERSTRAIN. v. n. [over and strain.] To make too violent efforts.
Cassius lost himself, his equipage, and his army, by over-straining for the Parthian gold. Cellier.

He wifed all painters would imprint this lesson deeply in their memory, that with overstraining and earnestness of finishing their pieces, they often did them more harm than good. Dryden's Dufresney.

To OVERSTRAIN. v. a. To stretch too far.
Confessors were apt to overstrain their privileges, in which St. Cyrian made a notable stand against them. Ayliffe.

To OVERSWAY. v. a. [over and sway.] To over-rule; to bear down.
When they are the major part of a general assembly, then their voices being more in number, must over-sway their judgments who are fewer. Hooker.

Great command o'er-sways our order. Shakefp.

To OVERSWELL. v. a. [over and swell.] To rise above.
Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'er-swells the cup;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love. Shakefp.

When his banks the prince of rivers, Po,
Doth over-swell, he breaks with hideous fall. Fairfax.

OVERT. adj. [overt, Fr.] Open; publick; apparent.
To vouch this, is no proof,
Without more certain and more overt tell,
Than these thin habits and poor likelihoods. Shakefp.

Overt and apparent virtues bring forth praise; but there be secret and hidden virtues that bring forth fortune; certain deliveries of a man's self.
My repulse at Hull, was the first overt essay to be made how patiently I could bear the loss of my kingdoms. K. Charles.

The design of their destruction may have been projected in the dark; but when all was ripe, their enemies proceeded to so many overt acts in the face of the nation, that it was obvious to the meanest. Swift.

Whereas human laws can reach no farther than to restrain the overt action, religion extends to the secret motions of the soul. Rogers, Sermon 17.

OVERTLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Openly.
To OVERTAKE. v. a. [over and take.]
1. To catch any thing by pursuit; to come up to something going before.
We durst not continue longer so near her confines, lest her plagues might suddenly overtake us before we did cease to be partakers with her sins. Hooker.

If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been overtaken; and yet she writes Pursuit would be but vain. Shakefp. Hamlet.

I shall see
The winged vengeance overtake such children. Shakefp.

The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil. Ex. xv. 9.

My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will out-strip hers, as bullets flown before
A later bullet may overtake, the powder being more. Donne.

OVE

To thy wishes move a speedy pace,
Or death will soon overtake thee in the chace. Dryden.

How must he tremble for fear vengeance should overtake him, before he has made his peace with God? Rogers.

2. To take by surprize.
If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness. Gal. vi. 1.

To OVERTAKE. v. a. [over and take.] To burthen with too heavy duties or injunctions.
That office is performed by the parts with difficulty, because they were overtaken. Harvey on Consumptions.

To OVERTHROW. v. a. [over and throw; preter. overthrew; part. overthrown.]
1. To turn upside down.
Pittacus was a wife and valiant man, but his wife overthrew the table when he had invited his friends. Taylor.

2. To throw down; to ruin; to demolish.
When the walls of Thebes he overthrew,
His fatal hand my royal father slew. Dryden.

3. To defeat; to conquer; to vanquish.
Our endeavour is not so much to overthrow them with whom we contend, as to yield them just and reasonable causes. Hooker, b. v. f. 1.

To Sujah next, your conquering army drew,
Him they surpris'd, and easily overthrew. Dryden.

4. To destroy; to mischief; to bring to nothing.
She found means to have us accused to the king, as though we went about some practise to overthrow him in his own estate. Sidney, b. ii.

Here's Glo'ster
O'er-charging your free purples with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

Thou walkest in peril of thy overthrowing. Ecc. xiii. 13.

God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedness. Prov. xxi. 12.

OVERTHROW. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The state of being turned upside down.
2. Ruin; destruction.
Of those christian oratories, the overthrow and ruin is desired, not by infidels, pagans, or Turks, but by a special refined sect of christian believers. Hooker, b. v. f. 17.

They return again into Florida, to the murder and overthrow of their own countrymen. Abbott.

I serve my mortal foe,
The man who caus'd my country's overthrow. Dryden.

3. Defeat; discomfiture.
From without came to mine eyes the blow,
Whereto mine inward thoughts did faintly yield;
Both these conspir'd poor reason's overthrow;
False in myself, thus have I lost the field. Sidney.

Quiet soul, depart;
For I have seen our enemies overthrow. Shakefp.

From these divers Scots feared more harm by victory than they found among their enemies by their overthrow. Haywood.

Poor Hannibal is maul'd,
The theme is giv'n, and frait the council's call'd,
Whether he should to Rome directly go,
To reap the fruit of the dire overthrow. Dryden.

4. Degradation.
His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not 'till then he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little. Shakefp.

OVERTHROWER. n. f. [from overthrow.] He who overthrows.
OVERTHWART. adj. [over and thwart.]
1. Opposite; being over against.
We whisper, for fear our overthwart neighbours should hear us, and betray us to the government. Dryden.

2. Crossing any thing perpendicularly.
Perverse; adverse; contradictory.
Two or three acts disposed them to cross and oppose any proposition; and that overthwart humour was discovered to rule in the breasts of many. Clarendon.

OVERTHWARTLY. adv. [from overthwart.]
1. Across; transversely.
The brawn of the thigh shall appear, by drawing small hair strokes from the hip to the knee, shadowed again overthwartly. Peacham on Drawing.

2. Pervicaciously; perversely.
OVERTHWARTNESS. n. f. [from overthwart.] Pervicacity; perverseness.

OVERTOOK. part. and part. pass. of overtake.

Of disposition gentle and of wisdom,
Shakep. Hen. VIII.
Overstepping woman's power.
 As far as the soul oversteeps the body, so far its pains, or rather mournful sensations, exceed those of the carcase. Harv.
 3. To obscure; to make of less importance by superior excellence.
 Whereas he had been heretofore an arbiter of Europe, he should now grow less, and be over-topped by so great a conjunction. Bacon's Henry VII.

One whom you love,
 Had champion kill'd, or trophy won,
 Rather than thus be overstept,
 Wou'd you not with his laurels crompt?
Swift.
 To OVERTRIP. v. a. [over and trip.] To trip over; to walk lightly over.

In such a night,
 Did Thibe fearfully overtip the dew,
 And saw the lion's shadow ere himself,
 And ran dismay'd away.
Shakep. March of Venice.
OVERTURE. n. f. [overture, French.]
 1. Opening; disclosure; discovery.
 I will

You had only in your silent judgment try'd it,
 Without more overture.
Shakep. Wm. Tale.
 2. Proposal; something offered to consideration.
 Mac Murgh moved Henry to invade Ireland, and made an overture unto him for obtaining of the sovereign lordship thereof. Devies on Ireland.
 All these fair overtures, made by men well esteem'd for honest dealing, could not take place.
Hayward.
 We with open breast
 Stand ready to receive them, if they like
 Our overture, and turn not back perverse.
Milton.
 The earl of Pembroke, who abhorred the war, promoted all overtures towards accommodation with great importunity. Clarendon.

If a convenient supply offers itself to be seized by force or gained by fraud, human nature persuades us to hearken to the inviting overture.
Rogers, Sermon 2.
 Suppose five hundred men proposing, debating, and voting, according to their own little or much reason, abundance of indigestible and abortive, many pernicious and foolish overtures would arise. Swift.

To OVERTURN. v. a. [over and turn.]
 1. To throw down; to topple down; to subvert; to ruin.
 He is wise in heart and mighty in strength—which removeth
 the mountains, and overturneth them in his anger. Jab ix. 5.
 These will sometimes overturn, and sometimes swallow up towns, and make a general confusion in nature. Burnet.
 This he obviates, by saying we see all the ideas in God; which is an answer to this objection, but such an one as overturns his whole hypothesis, and renders it useless and as unintelligible, as any of those he has laid aside. Locke.
 If we will not encourage publick works of beneficence, till we are secure that no form shall overturn what we help to build; there is no room left for charity. Atterbury.
 A monument of deathless fame,
 A woman's hand overtums. Rowe.

2. To over-power; to conquer.
 Pain excessive overturns all patience. Milton.
OVERTURNER. n. f. [from overturn.] Subverter.
 I have brought before you a robber of the publick treasure, an overturner of law and justice, and the destruction of the Sicilian province. Swift.
 To OVERVALUE. v. a. [over and value.] To rate at too high a price.

We have just cause to stand in some fear, lest by thus overvaluing their sermons they make the price and estimation of scripture, otherwise notified, to fall. Hester.
 To OVERVEIL. v. a. [over and veil.] To cover;
 The day begins to break, and night is fled;
 Whose pitchy mantle overveils the earth. Shakep.

To OVERVOTE. v. a. [over and vote.] To conquer by plurality of votes.
 The lords and commons might be content to be overvoted by the major part of both houses, when they had used each their own freedom. King Charles.
 To OVERWATCH. v. n. [over and watch.] To subdue with long want of rest.

Morpheus is dispatch'd;
 Which done, the lazy monarch overwatches d,
 Down from his propping elbow drops his head,
 Dissolv'd in sleep, and thrinks within his bed. Dryden.
OVERWATCHED. adj. Tired with too much watching.
 While the dog hunted in the river, he had withdrawn himself to pacify with sleep his over-watched eyes. Sidney.
OVERWEAK. adj. [over and weak.] Too weak; too feeble.
 Paternal persuasions, after mankind began to forget the original giver of life, became in all overweak to resist the first inclination of evil; or after, when it became habitual, to constrain it. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

OVE

 To OVERWEARY. adj. [over and weary.] To subdue with fatigue.
 Might not Palinurus fall asleep and drop into the sea, having been over-wearied with watching. Dryden.
 To OVERWEATHER. v. a. [over and weather.] To batter
 by violence of weather.

How like a younker or a prodigal,
 The skiffed bark puts from her native bay,
 Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind!
 How like the prodigal doth the return,
 With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails,
 Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the trumpet wind. Shakep.
 To OVERWEE. n. v. n. [over and ween.] To think too highly;
 to think with arrogance.

To reach beyond the truth of any thing in thought;
 especially in the opinion of a man's self. Hammer.
 Oft have I seen a hot overweening cur,
 Run back and bite, because he was with-held.

My master hath sent for me, to whose feeling sorrows I might be some ally, or I overween to think so. Shakep.
 Lash hence these overweening rags of France,
 These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives. Shakep.
 My eye's too quick, my heart overween too much,
 Unless my hand and strength could equal them. Shakep.
 Take heed of overweening, and compare
 Thy peacock's feet with thy gay peacock's train;
 Study the best and highest things that are,
 But of thyself an humble thought retain. Devins.

They that overween,
 And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
 No anger find in thee. Milton.

He might have learnt
 Less overweening, since he fail'd in Job,
 Whose constant perseverance overcame
 Whate'er his cruel malice could invent. Par. Reg.
 No man is so bold, rash, and overweening of his own works, as an ill painter and a bad poet. Dryden.
 Enthusiasm, though founded neither on reason nor reverence, but rising from the conceits of a warmed or overweening brain, works more powerfully on the perceptions and actions of men, than either or both together. Locke.
 Men of fair minds and not given up to the overweening of self-flattery, are frequently guilty of it: and, in many cases, one with amazement hears the arguments, and is astonish'd at the obliquity of a worthy man who yields not to the evidence of reason. Locke.

Now enters overweening pride,
 And scandal ever gaping wide. Swift.
OVERWEENINGLY. adv. [from overween.] With too much arrogance; with too high an opinion.
 To OVERWEIGH. v. a. [over and weigh.] To preponderate.
 Sharp and subtle discourses of wit, procure many times very great applause, but being laid in the balance with that which the habit of sound experience delivereth, they are over-weighed. Hester, l. v. f. 7.

My unfoild name, the aftercents of my life,
 Will so your accusation overweigh,
 That you shall stifle in your own report. Shakep.
OVERWEIGHT. n. f. [over and weight.] Preponderance.
 Sinking into water is but an overweight of the body, in respect of the water. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To OVERWHELM. v. a. [over and whelm.]
 1. To crush underneath something violent and weighty.
 What age is this, where honest men,
 Plac'd at the helm,
 A sea of some foul mouth or pen,
 Shall overwhelm? Ben. Jonson.

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head,
 With the hell hatred lie overwhelm thy heart. Shakep.
 How trifling an apprehension is the shame of being laugh'd at by fools, when compared with that everlasting shame and astonishment which shall overwhelm the sinner, when he shall appear before the tribunal of Christ. Rogers.
 Blind they rejoice, though now even now they fall;
 Death hastes amain; one hour overwhelms them all. Pope.
 2. To overlook gloomily.

Let the brow overwhelm it,
 As fearfully as doth a galled rook
 O'erhang and jutty his confounded base. Shakep.
 An apothecary late I noted,
 In tatter'd weeds with overwhelming brows, Culling of simples. Shakep. Rom. and Juliet.

OVERWHELMINGLY. adv. [from overwhelming.] In such a manner as to overwhelm.
 Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin, nor imperitently betray their souls to ruin for that which they call light and trivial; which is so indeed in respect

OUN

respect of the acquiescent, but overwhelmingly ponderous in regard of the pernicious consequences. Decay of Piety.
OVERWISE. v. a. [over and wise.] Wife to affectation.
 Make not thyself overwise. Ecd. vii. 16.

OVERWROUGHT. part. [over and wrought.]
 1. Labour'd too much.
 Apelles said of Protogenes, that he knew not when to give over. A work may be overwrought, as well as underwrought: too much labour often takes away the spirit, by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden's Dufresny.

2. Work'd all over.
 Of Gothic structure was the northern side,
Overwrought with ornaments of barbarous pride. Pope.
 3. It has in Shakespeare a sense which I know not well how to reconcile to the original meaning of the word, and therefore conclude it misprinted for overwrought; that is, overreached or cheated.

By some device or other,
 The villain is overwrought of all my money:
 They say this town is full of cozenage. Shakep.

OVERWORN. part. [over and worn.]
 1. Worn out; subdued by toil.
 With watching overworn, with cares oppress'd, Unhappy I had laid me down to rest. Dryden.

2. Spoiled by time.
 The jealous overworn widow and herself,
 Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shakep.
OVERYEA'RED. adj. [over and year.] Too old.

Among them dwelt
 A maid, whose fruit was ripe, not overyeared. Fairfax.
OVERZEALOUS. adj. [over and zealous.] Too zealous.
 It is not of such weighty necessity to determine one way or the other, as some overzealous for or against the immortality of the soul, have been forward to make the world believe. Locke.

OUCHT. n. f. [aphix, that is, a whit, Saxon. This word is therefore more properly written ought. See AUGHT.] Any thing; not nothing.
 For ought that I can understand, there is no part but the bare English ought, in which the Irish have not the greatest footing. Spenser on Ireland.

He asked him if he saw ought. Mark viii. 23.
 To do ought good never will be our task;
 But ever to do ill our sole delight.
 Universal Lord! be bounteous still
 To give us only good; and if the night
 Have gather'd ought of evil, or conceal'd, Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark. Milton.

1. Externally; opposed to inwardly.
That which inwardly each man should be, the church outwardly ought to testify.
Hooker, b. v. f. 6.
Grieved with disgrace, remaining in their fears:
However seeming outwardly content,
Yet th' inward touch their wounded honour bears.
Daniel.
2. In appearance not sincerely.
Many wicked men are often touched with some inward reverence for that goodness which they cannot be persuaded to practise; nay, which they outwardly seem to despise.
Spratt.
OUTWARDS. adv. Towards the out-parts.
Do not black bodies conceive heat more easily from light than those of other colours do, by reason that the light falling on them is not reflected outwards, but enters the bodies, and is often reflected and refracted within them until it be stifled and lost?
Newton's Opticks.
TO OUTWEAR. v. a. [out and wear.] To pass tediously.
By the stream, if I the night out-wear,
Thus spent already how shall nature bear
The dews defending and nocturnal air.
Pept.
TO OUTWEED. v. a. [out and weed.] To extirpate as a weed.
Wrath is a fire, and jealousy a weed;
The sparks soon quench, the springing weed out-weed.
Spens.
TO OUTWEIGH. v. a. [out and weigh.]
1. To exceed in gravity.
These instruments require so much strength for the supporting of the weight to be moved, as may be equal unto it, besides that other super-added power whereby it is out-weighed and moved.
Wilkins's Math. Mag.
2. To preponderate; to excel in value or influence.
If any think brave death out-weighs bad life,
Let him express his disposition.
Shaksp. Coriolanus.
All your care is for your prince I see,
Your truth to him out-weighs your love to me.
Dryden.
Whenever he finds the hardship of his slavery out-weighs the value of his life, it is in his power, by resisting the will of his master, to draw on himself the death he desires.
Lake.
The marriage of the clergy is attended with the poverty of some of them, which is balanced and out-weighed by many single advantages.
Atterbury.
TO OUTWELL. v. a. [out and well.] To pour out.
As when old father Nilus 'gins to swell,
With timely pride about the Egyptian vale,
His fatigues waves do fertile silt out-well,
And overflow each plain and lowly dale.
Fa. Queen.
TO OUTWIT. v. a. [out and wit.] To cheat; to overcome by stratagem.
A fox may be out-witted, and a hare out-strip.
L'Estr.
The truer hearted any man is, the more liable he is to be imposed on; and then the world calls it out-witting a man, when he is only out-knaved.
L'Estrange.
Nothing is more equal in justice, and indeed more natural in the direct consequence of effects and causes, than for men wickedly yive to out-wit themselves; and for such as wrestle with providence, to trip up their own heels.
South.
After the death of Cæsar, Pompey found himself out-witted by Cæsar and broke with him.
Dryden.
OUTWORK. n. f. [out and work.] The parts of a fortification next the enemy.
Take care of our out-work, the navy royal, which are the walls of the kingdom; and every great ship is an impregnable fort; and our many safe and commodious ports as the redoubts to secure them.
Bacon.
Death hath taken in the out-works,
And now assails the fort; I feel, I feel him
Gnawing my heart-strings.
Denham.
OUTWORN. part. [from out-wear.] Consumed or destroyed by use.
Better at home lie bed-ridden, idle,
Inglorious, unemploy'd, with age out-worn.
Milton.

OWN

To OUTWREST. v. a. [out and wrest.] To extort by violence.

The growing anguish
Rankled so sore and fetter'd inwardly,
Till that the truth thereof I did out-wrest. Fa. Queen.
OUTWROUGHT. part. [out and wrought.] Out-done; exceeded in efficacy.

In your violent acts,
The fall of torrents and the noise of tempests,
The boiling of Carybdis, the sea's wildness,
The eating force of flames, and wings of winds,
Be all out-wrought by your transcendent furies. B. Johnf.

To OUTWORTH. v. a. [out and worth.] To excel in value.
A beggar's book

Out-worths a noble's blood. Shakef. Hen. VIII.
To OWE. v. a. [eg aa, I owe, or I ought, Islandick.]

1. To be obliged to pay; to be indebted.
I owe you much, and, like a wife's youth,
That which I owe is lost. Shakef. Merch. of Ven.

Let none seek needful causes to approve
The faith they owe. Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix.

All your parts of pious duty done,
You owe your Ormond nothing but a son. Dryden.

Thou hast deferr'd more love than I can show,
But 'tis thy fate to give, and mine to owe. Dryden.

If, upon the general balance of trade, English merchants owe to foreigners one hundred thousand pounds, if commodities do not, our money must go out to pay it. Locke.

2. To be obliged to ascribe; to be obliged for.
By me upheld, that he may know how frail
His fall'n condition is, and to me owe. Milton.

3. To have from any thing as the consequence of a cause.
O deem thy fall not ow'd to man's decree,
Jove hated Greece, and punish'd Greece in thee. Pope.

4. To possess; to be the right owner of. For owe, which is, in this sense, obsolete, we now use own.

Thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow'st not, and hast put thyself Upon this island as a spy. Shakef. Tempest.

Fate, shew thy force; ourselves we do not owe;
What is decreed must be; and be this so. Shakef.

Not poppy nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy sirups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'st yesterday. Shakef. Othello.

If any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe.
The winged wand'rer. Craftsw.

5. A practice has long prevailed among writers, to use owing, the active participle of owe, in a passive sense, for owed or due. Of this impropriety Bolton was aware, and, having no quick sense of the force of English words, has used due, in the sense of consequence or imputation, which by other writers is only used of debt. We say, the money is due to me; Bolton says, the effect is due to the cause.

6. Consequential.
This was owing to an indifference to the pleasures of life, and an aversion to the pomps of it. Atterbury.

7. Due as a debt.
You are both too bold;
I'll teach you all what's owing to your queen. Dryden.

The debt, owing from one country to the other, cannot be paid without real effects sent thither to that value. Locke.

8. Imputable to, as an agent.
If we estimate things, what in them is owing to nature, and what to labour, we shall find in most of them $\frac{2}{3}$ to be on the account of labour.

The custom of particular impeachments was not limited any more than that of struggles between nobles and commons, the ruin of Greece was owing to the former, as that of Rome was to the latter. Swift.

OWL. n. f. [ule, Saxon; bulote, French and Scottish.] A O'WLET. n. f. [bird that flies about in the night and catches mice.
Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing
For a charm. Shakef. Macbeth.

Return to her!
No! rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl. Shakef.

'Twas when the dog-star's unpropitious ray Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd every bay;
Sick was the fun, the owl forsook his bow!
O'WLER. n. f. One who carries contraband goods. Perhaps from the necessity of carrying on an illicit trade by night.

By running goods, these graceless owlers gain. Swift.
We understand by some owlers, old people die in France.
Tatler, N^o. 56.

OWN. n. f. [agen, Saxon; egen, Dutch.]

1. This is a word of no other use than as it is added to the possessive pronouns, my, thy, his, our, your, their. It seems to be a substantive; as, my own, my peculiar: but is, in reality, the participle passive of the verb owe, in the participle own or own: my own; the thing owned by, or belonging to me.

OX

Inachus in his cave alone,
Wept not another's losses, but his own. Dryden.

2. It is added generally by way of emphasis or corroboration.
I yet never was forsworn,
Scarcely have coveted what was my own. Shakef.

Every nation made gods of their own, and put them in high places. 2 Kings xvii. 29.

For my own share one beauty I design,
Engage your honours that she shall be mine. Dryden.

It is conceit rather than understanding, if it must be under the restraint of receiving and holding opinions by the authority of any thing but their own perceived evidence. Locke.

Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn,
And knit thee gloves made of her own spun yarn. Gay.

Passion and pride were to her soul unknown,
Convinc'd that virtue only is our own. Pope.

3. Sometimes it is added to note opposition or contradiction;
donestic; not foreign; mine, his, or yours; not another's.

These toils abroad, these tumults with his own,
Fell in the revolution of one year. Daniel.

There's nothing fillier than a crafty knave out-witted, and beaten at his own play. L'Estrange.

To OWN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To acknowledge; to avow for one's own.
When you come, find me out,
And own me for your son. Dryden's Cleomenes.

2. To possess; to claim; to hold by right.
Tell me, ye Trojans, for that name you own;
Nor is your course upon our coasts unknown. Dryden.

Others on earth o'er human race prelide,
Of these the chief, the care of nations own,
And guard with arms divine the British throne. Pope.

3. To avow.
I'll venture out alone,
Since you, fair prince, my protection own. Dryden.

4. To confess; not to deny.
Make this truth so evident, that those who are unwilling to own it may yet be ashamed to deny it. Tillotson.

Others will own their weakness of understanding. Locke.

OWNERSHIP. n. f. [from owner.] Property; rightful possession.
In a real action, the proximate cause is the property or ownership of the thing in controversy. Ayliffe's Par.

OWNER. n. f. [from own.] One to whom any thing belongs; master; rightful possessor.

A bark
Stays but till her owner comes aboard. Shakef.

Is it not enough to break into my garden,
Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner,
But thou wilt brave me. Shakef.

Here shew favour, because it happeneth that the owner hath incurred the forfeiture of eight years profit of his lands, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process against him. Bacon.

They intend advantage of my labours,
With no small profit daily to my owners. Milton.

These wait the owners' last despair,
And what's permitted to the flames invade. Dryden.

A freehold, though but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it.
Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 1.

That small muscle draws the nose upwards, when it expresses the contempt which the owner of it has upon seeing any thing he does not like. Addison's Spectator.

Victory hath not made us insolent, nor have we taken advantage to gain any thing beyond the honour of restoring every one's right to their just owners. Atterbury.

What is this wit, which must our cares employ?
The owner's wife, that other men enjoy. Pope.

OWRE. n. f. [urus jubatus, Lat.] A beast. Ainsworth.

OX. n. f. plur. Oxen. [oxa, Saxon; oxes, Danish.]

1. The general name for black cattle.
The black ox hath not trod on his foot. Candem.

Sheep run not half so tim'rous from the wolf,
Or horse or oxen from the leopard. Shakef.

As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves,
I saw the river Clitumnus, celebrated by the poets for making cattle white that drink of it. The inhabitants of that country have still the same opinion, and have a great many oxen of a whitish colour to confirm them in it. Addif.

2. A castrated bull.
The horns of oxen and cows are larger than the bulls;
which is caused by abundance of moisture. Bacon.

Although there be naturally more males than females, yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen and weathers, there are fewer. Graunt.

The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough. Dryden.

The

OYE

The frowning bull

And ox half-raisd. Thomson's Summer.
OXBANE. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

OXEYE. n. f. [Bupthalmus.] The whole face of the plant is like tanfy; the flowers are radiated, and the most part produced simply; the flowers of the disk are separated with an imbricated little leaf. Miller.

OXGANG. of Land. n. f. Twenty acres. Ainsworth.

OXHEAL. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

OXLEY. n. f. [ex and fly.] A fly of a particular kind.

OXLIP. n. f. The same with cowslip; a vernal flower.

any proclamation or advertisement given by the publick criers both in England and Scotland. It is thrice repeated.

OZO

Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
Attend your office and your quality.
Crier hobgoblin make the fairy Oyer. Shakef.

O yes! if any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry;
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag. Craftsw.

OYLETHOLE. n. f. See OYLET. [It may be written oylet, from oillet, French; but oylet seems better.]

Distinguish'd slashes deck the great,
As each excels in birth or state;
His *oylet*holes are more and ampler,
The king's own body was a famplar. Prior.

O'YSTER. n. f. [oyster, Dutch; huitre, Fr.] A bivalve testa-ceous fish.

I will not lend thee a penny—
—Why then the world's mine oyster which I with sword will open. Shakef. Merr. W. of Wind.

Rich honestly dwells like your miser, fir, in a poor house;
as your pearl in your foul oyster. Shakef.

Another mass held a kind of oyster shell, and other bivalves.

There may be as many ranks of beings in the invisible world superior to us, as we are superior to all the ranks of being in this visible world; though we descend below the oyster to the least animated atoms discovered by microscopes.
Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

Where oyster tubs in rows
Are rang'd beside the posts, there stay thy haste. Gay.

O'YSTERWENCH. n. f. [oyster and wench, or woman.] A

PARADOX. n. f. [παράδοξος, Fr. παράδοξος.] A tenet contrary to received opinion; an assertion contrary to appearances; a position in appearance absurd.

A gloss there is to colour that paradox, and make it appear in shew not to be altogether unreasonable. Hobbs.

You undergo too strict a paradox, Striving to make an ugly deed look fair. Shakespeare.

In their love of God, men can never be too affectionate: it is as true, though it may seem a paradox, that in their hatred of sin, men may be sometimes too passionate. Syrat.

PARADOXICAL. adj. [from paradox.]
 1. Having the nature of a paradox. What hath been every where opinioned by all men, is more than paradoxical to dispute. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Strange it is, how the curiosity of men, that have been active in the instruction of beasts, among those many paradoxical and unheard-of imitations, should not attempt to make one speak. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Those will seem strange and paradoxical to one that takes a prospect of the world. Norris.

2. Inclined to new tenets, or notions contrary to received opinions. PARADOXICALLY. adv. [from paradox.] In a paradoxical manner; in a manner contrary to received opinions.

If their vanity of appearing singular puts them upon advancing paradoxes, and proving them as paradoxical, they are usually laugh'd at. Collins on Pride.

PAR

PARADOXICALNESS. n. f. [from paradox.] State of being paradoxical.

PARADOXOLOGY. n. f. [from paradox.] The use of paradoxes. Perpend the difficulty, which obscurity, or unavoidable paradoxology, must put upon the attempter. Brown.

PARAGOGE. n. f. [παράγωγη; parago, Fr.] A figure whereby a letter or syllable is added at the end of a word, without adding any thing to the sense of it. Diä.

PARAGON. n. f. [paragon, from parage, equality, old French; paragone, Italian.]

Tunis was never grac'd before with such a paragon to their queen. Shakespeare. Tempest.

2. Companion; fellow. Alone he rode without his paragon. Spenser.

To PARAGON. v. a. [parangonner, French.]
 1. To compare. The picture of Pamela, in little form, he wore in a tablet, purposing to paragon the little one with Artelia's length, not doubting but even, in that little quantity, the excellency of that would shine through the weakness of the other. Sidney.

I will give thee bloody teeth, If thou with Caesar paragon again My man of men. Shakespeare.

Proud feat Of Lucifer, so by allusion call'd Of that bright star to Satan paragon'd. Milt. Par. Legl.

2. To equal. He hath achiev'd a maid That paragons description and wild fame; One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens. Shakespeare.

We will wear our mortal state with her; Catharine our queen, before the primest creature That's paragon'd i' th' world. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.

PARAGRAPH. n. f. [paragraphe, Fr. παράγραφον.] A distinct part of a discourse. Of his last paragraphe, I have transcribed the most important parts. Swift.

PARAGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from paragraphe.] By *paragraphe*s; with distinct breaks or divisions.

PARALLACTICAL. } adj. [from parallax.] Pertaining to a PARALLACTICK. } parallax.
PARALLAX. n. f. [παράλλαξις.] The distance between the true and apparent place of the sun, or any star viewed from the surface of the earth.

By what strange parallax or optick skill Of vision multiply'd Milton's Paradis Regained.

Light moves from the sun to us in about seven or eight minutes time, which distance is about 70,000,000 English miles, supposing the horizontal parallax of the sun to be about twelve seconds. Newton's Optics.

PARALLEL. adj. [παράλληλος; parallel, Fr.]
 1. Extended in the same direction, and preserving always the same distance. Distorting the order and theory of causes perpendicular to their effects, he draws them aside into things whereunto they run parallel, and their proper motions would never meet together. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Having the same tendency. When honour runs parallel with the laws of God and our country, it cannot be too much cherished; but when the dictates of honour are contrary to those of religion and equity, they are the great deprivations of human nature. Addison.

3. Continuing the resemblance through many particulars; equal; like. The foundation principle of peripateticism is exactly parallel to an acknowledged nothing. Glaville.

I shall observe something parallel to the wooing and wedding suit in the behaviour of persons of figure. Addison.

PARALLEL. n. f. [from the adjective.]
 1. Lines continuing their course, and still remaining at the same distance from each other. Who made the spider parallel design, Sure as De Moivre, without rule or line? Pope.

2. Lines on the globe marking the latitude. Direction conformable to that of another line. Diffusions, like small streams, are first begun, Scarce seen they rise but gather as they run; So lines, that from their parallel decline, More they proceed, the more they still disjoin. Garth.

3. Resemblance; conformity continued through many particulars; likeness. Such a resemblance of all parts, Life, death, age, fortune, nature, arts; She lights her torch at theirs to tell, And views the world this parallel. Denham.

'Twixt earthly females and the moon, All parallel exactly run. Swift's Miscel.

PAR

5. Comparison made. The parallel holds in the gainfulness, as well as laboriousness of the work. Decay of Piety.

A reader cannot be more rationally entertained, than by comparing and drawing a parallel between his own private character, and that of other persons. Addison.

6. Any thing resembling another. Thou ungrateful brute, if thou wouldst find thy parallel, go to hell, which is both the region and the emblem of ingratitude. South's Sermons.

For works like these, let deathless journals tell, None but thyself can be thy parallel. Pope.

To PARALLEL. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To place, so as always to keep the same direction with another line. The Azores having a middle situation between these continents and that vast tract of America, the needle seemeth equally distracted by both, and diverting unto neither, doth parallel and place itself upon the true meridian. Brown.

2. To keep in the same direction; to level. His life is parallel. Shakespeare.

Ev'n with the stroke and line of his great justice. Shakespeare.

3. To correspond to. That he stretched out the north over the empty places, seems to parallel the expression of David, he stretched out the earth upon the waters. Burnet.

4. To be equal to; to resemble through many particulars. In the fire, the destruction was so swift, sudden, vast and miserable, as nothing can parallel in story. Dryden.

5. To compare. I parallel d more than once, our idea of sustance, with the Indian philosopher's he-knew-not-what; which supported the tortoise. Locke.

PARALLELISM. n. f. [parallelisme, Fr. from parallel.] State of being parallel. The parallelism and due proportioned inclination of the axis of the earth. Mor's Divine Dialogues.

Speaking of the parallelism of the axis of the earth, I demand, whether it be better to have the axis of the earth steady and perpetually parallel to itself, or to have it carelessly tumble this way and that way. Ray on the Creation.

PARALLELOGRAM. n. f. [παράλληλος and γέγραμα; parallelogramme, Fr.] In geometry, a right lined quadrilateral figure, whose opposite sides are parallel and equal. Harris.

The experiment we made in a lodestone of a parallelogram, or long figure, wherein only inverting the extremes, as it came out of the fire, we altered the poles. Brown.

We may have a clear idea of the area of a parallelogram, without knowing what relation it bears to the area of a triangle. Watt's Logick.

PARALLELOGRAMICAL. adj. [from parallelogram.] Having the properties of a parallelogram.

PARALLELOPIPED. n. f. [from parallelopede, Fr.] A solid figure contained under six parallelograms, the opposites of which are equal and parallel; or it is a prism, whose base is a parallelogram; it is always triple to a pyramid of the same base and height. Harris.

Two prisms alike in shape I tied so, that their axes and opposite sides being parallel, they compos'd a paralleloped. Newton's Optics.

Crystals that hold lead are yellowish, and of a cubic or paralleloped figure. Woodward.

PARALOGISM. n. f. [παράλογισμος; paralogisme, Fr.] A false argument. That because they have not a bladder of gall, like those we observe in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogism not admissible, a fallacy that dwells not in a cloud, and needs not the sun to scatter it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Modern writers, making the drachma less than the denarius, others equal, have been deceived by a double paralogism, in standing too nicely upon the bare words of the ancients, without examining the things. Arbutnot.

If a syllogism agree with the rules given for the construction of it, it is called a true argument: if it disagree with these rules, it is a paralogism, or false argument. Watts.

PARALOGY. n. f. False reasoning. That Methusalem was the longest liver of all the posterity of Adam, we quietly believe; but that he must needs be so, is perhaps below paralogy to deny. Brown.

PARALYSIS. [παράλυσις; paralyse, Fr.] A palsy. PARALYTICAL. } adj. [from paralyse; paralytique, Fr.] Pal-PARALYTICK. } adj. paralytic; inclined to palsy. Nought shall it profit, that the charming fair, Angelic, softest work of heav'n, draws near To the cold shaking paralytick hand, Senseless of beauty. Prior.

If a nerve be cut, or streightly bound, that goes to any muscle, that muscle shall immediately lose its motion; which is the case of paralyticks. Derham.

The difficulties of breathing and swallowing, without any tumour after long diseases, proceed commonly from a resolution or paralytical disposition of the parts. Arbutnot.

PAR

PARAMETER. n. f. The latus rectum of a parabola, is a third proportional to the abscissa and any ordinate; so that the square of the ordinate is always equal to the rectangle under the parameter and abscissa; but, in the ellipsis and hyperbola, it has a different proportion. Harris.

PARAMOUNT. adj. [par and mount.] 1. Superiour; having the highest jurisdiction; as lord paramount, the chief of the feignory.

Leagues within the state are ever pernicious to monarchies; for they raise an obligation, paramount to obligation of sovereignty, and make the king, tanquam unus ex nobis. Bacon.

The dogmatist's opinioned assurance is paramount to argument. Glanville.

If all power be derived from Adam, by divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government; and therefore the positive laws of men cannot determine that which is itself the foundation of all law. Locke.

Mankind, seeing the apostles possessed of a power plainly paramount to the powers of all the known beings, whether angels or demons, could not question their being inspired by God. Wells on the Resurrection.

2. Eminent; of the highest order. John a Chamber was hanged upon a gibbet raised a stage higher in the midst of a square gallows, as a traitor paramount; and a number of his chief accomplices were hanged upon the lower story round him. Bacon.

PARAMOUNT. n. f. The chief. In order came the grand infernal peers, 'Midst came their mighty paramount. Milton's P. L.

PARAMOUR. n. f. [par and amour, Fr.] 1. A lover or wooer.

Upon the floor A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat, Court'd of many a jolly paramour, The which them did in modestwise amate, And each one sought his lady to aggrate. Fa. Queen.

No season then for her To wanton with the fun her lusty paramour. Milt.

2. A mistress. It is obsolete in both senses, though not inellegant or unmusical.

Shall I believe That unsubstantial death is amorous, And that the lean abhorred monster keeps Thee here in dark to be his paramour. Shakespeare.

PARANYPH. n. f. [παρά and νύμφη; paranymphe, Fr.] 1. A bride-man; one who leads the bride to her marriage.

The Timian bride Had not so soon prefer'd Thy paranymphe, worthles to thee compar'd, Succed in thy bed. Milton's Agonistes.

PARAPEGM. n. f. [παρά and πέγμ; paraepem, Fr.] A brazen table fixed to a pillar, on which laws and proclamations were anciently engraved: also a table set up publicly, containing an account of the rising and setting of the stars, eclipses of the sun and moon, the seasons of the year, &c. whence astrologers give this name to the tables, on which they draw figures according to their art. Philips.

Our forefathers, observing the course of the sun, and marking certain mutations to happen in his progress through the zodiac, set them down in their paraepems, or astronomical canons. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PARAPET. n. f. [parapet, Fr. parapetto, Italian.] A wall breast high. There was a wall or parapet of teeth set in our mouth to restrain the petulance of our words. Ben Jonson.

PARAPHIMOSIS. n. f. [παρά and φίμωσις; paraphimosis, Fr.] A disease when the preputium cannot be drawn over the glans.

PARAPHERNALIA. n. f. [Lat. parapherna, Fr.] Goods in the wife's disposal. Philips.

PARAPHRASE. n. f. [παρά and φράσις; paraphrase, Fr.] A loose interpretation; an explanation in many words. All the laws of nations were but a paraphrase upon this standing rectitude of nature, that was ready to enlarge itself into suitable determinations, upon all emergent objects and occasions. South's Sermons.

In paraphrase, or translation with latitude, the author's words are not so strictly followed as his sense, and that too amplified, but not altered: such is Mr. Waller's translation of Virgil's fourth Æneid. Dryden.

TO PARAPHRASE. v. a. [paraphrase, Fr. παράφραζε, v.] To interpret with laxity of expression; to translate loosely. We are put to confute and paraphrase our own words, to free ourselves from the ignorance and malice of our adversaries. Stillingfleet's Disc. of Diss. on Remiss. Idolatry.

What needs he paraphrase on what we mean, We were at work but wanton; he's obscene. Dryden.

Where translation is impracticable, they may paraphrase.— But it is intolerable, that under a pretence of paraphrasing and translating, a way should be suffered of treating authors to a manifest disadvantage. Felton on the Classics.

PARAPHRASE. n. f. [paraphrase, Fr. παράφρασις.] A lax interpreter; one who explains in many words.

The fittest for public audience are such, as following a middle course between the rigor of literal translators and the liberty of paraphrasts, do, with great shortness and plainness, deliver the meaning. Hooker.

The chaldean paraphrast renders Gerah by Meath. Arbuth.

PARAPHRASICAL. adj. [from paraphrase.] Lax in interpretation; not literal; not verbal.

PARAPHRASIS. n. f. [παρά and φράσις; paraphrasis, Fr.] Paraphrasis is an inflammation of the diaphragm. The symptoms are a violent fever, a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuth.

PARASANG. n. f. [parajanga, low Latin.] A Persian measure of length.

Since the mind is not able to frame an idea of any space without parts, instead thereof it makes use of the common measures, which, by familiar use, in each country, have imprinted themselves on the memory; as inches and feet, or cubits and parajangs. Locke.

PARASITE. n. f. [parasite, Fr. parasite, Latin.] One that frequents rich tables, and earns his welcome by flattery. He is a flatterer.

A parasite, a keeper back of death, Who gently would dissolve the bands of life, Which false hopes linger. Shakespeare.

Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites, Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears, You fools of fortune. Shakespeare.

Come, you parasite, answer me Directly to this question. Shakespeare.

Diogenes, when mice came about him, as he was eating, said, I see, that even Diogenes nourisheth parasites. Bacon.

I thou, with trembling fear, Or like a fawning parasite, obeyed; Then to thyself accrib'd the truth foretold. Milton.

The people sweat not for their king's delight, To enrich a pimple, or raise a parasite. Dryden.

PARASITICAL. adj. [parasitico, Fr. from parasite.] Flat-tering; wheedling. The bishop received small thanks for his parasitic presentation. Hakewill on Providence.

Some parasitic preachers have dared to call those martyrs, who died fighting against me. King Charles.

Her filthy parbreak all the place defiled has. Fa. Queen.

PARCEL. n. f. parcelle, French; particula, Latin.] 1. A small bundle.

2. A part of the whole taken separately. Women, Silvius, had they mark'd him In parcels, as I did, would have gone near To fall in love with him. Shakespeare.

I drew from her a prayer of earnest heart, That I would all my pilgrimage dilate; Whereof by parcels had I something heard, But not distinctively. Shakespeare's Othello.

An inventory thus importing, The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs and ornaments given to particular persons, any one of which, if divided into smaller parcels, and distributed to those, who distinguish themselves by wit or learning, would answer the end. Swift.

The same experiments succeed on two parcels of the white of an egg, only it grows somewhat thicker upon mixing with an acid. Arbuthnot on Aliment.

3. A quantity or mass. What can be rationally conceived in so transparent a substance as water for the production of these colours, besides the various sizes of its fluid and globular parcels. Newton.

4. A number of persons, in contempt. This youthful parcel Of noble batchelors stand at my bestowing. Shakespeare.

5. Any

PAR

5. Any number or quantity in contempt. They came to this conclusion; that, unless they could, by a parcel of fair words and pretences, engage them into a confederacy, there was no good to be done. L'Estrange.

TO PARCEL. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To divide into portions.

If they allot and parcel out several perfections to several deities, do they not, by this, assert contradictions, making deity only to such a measure perfect; whereas a deity implies perfection beyond all measure. South's Sermons.

Those ghastly kings would parcel out my pow'r, And all the fates of my land devour. Dryden.

2. To make up into a mass. What a wounding shame, That mine own servant should Parcel the sum of my disgraces by Addition of his envy! Shakespeare.

PARCER. n. f. [In common law.] When one dies possessed of an estate, and having issue only daughters, or his sisters be his heirs; so that the lands descend to those daughters or sisters: these are called parceners, and are but as one heir. Ditt.

PARCERNY. n. f. [from parcener, French.] A holding or occupying of land by more persons pro indiviso, or by joint tenants, otherwise called coparceners: for if they refuse to divide their common inheritance, and chuse rather to hold it jointly, they are said to hold in parcenary. Cowel.

TO PARCH. v. a. [from parcher, says Junius; from percoquo, says Skinner; neither of them seem satisfied with their conjectures: perhaps from parculus, burnt, to parch, to parch; perhaps from parchment, the effect of fire upon parchment being almost proverbial.] To burn slightly and superficially; to scorch; to dry up.

Hath thy fiery heart to parch thine entrails, That not a tear can fall. Shakespeare.

Did he so often lodge in open field In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat, To conquer France. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Torrid heat, And vapours as the Libyan air adust, Began to parch that temperate clime. Milt. Par. Lost.

I'm stupify'd with sorrow, past relief Of tears; parch'd up and wither'd with my grief. Dryden.

Without this circular motion of our earth, one hemisphere would be condemned to perpetual cold and darkness, the other continually roasted and parched by the sun beams. Ray.

The Syrian star With his sultry breath infects the fly; The ground below is parch'd, the heav'n above us fry. Dryden's Horace.

Full fifty years I have endur'd the biting winter's blast, And the severer heats of parching summer. Rowe.

He is like a man distressed with thirst in the parched places of the wilderness, he searches every pit, but finds no water. Rogers's Sermons.

TO PARCH. v. n. To be scorched. We were better parch in Africk sun, Than in the pride and filth scorn of his eyes. Shakespeare.

If to prevent the acrospiring, it be thrown thin, many come will dry and parch into bailey. Mort. Haub.

PARCHMENT. n. f. [parchemin, French; pergamena, Latin.] Skins dressed for the writer. Among traders, the skins of sheep are called parchment, those of calves vellum.

Is not this a lamentable thing, that the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment; that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

In the coffin, that had the books, they were found as fresh as if newly written, being written in parchment, and covered with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Like flying shades before the clouds we flew, We shrink like parchment in consuming flame. Dryden.

PARCHMENT-MAKER. n. f. [parchment and maker.] He who dresses parchment. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

PARDA. n. f. pardus, pardalis, Latin.] The leopard; the pardale. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

The pardale swift, and the tiger cruel, As fox to lambs, as wolf to heifer's calf; As pard to the hind, or step-dame to her son. Shakespeare.

Ten brace of greyhounds, snowy fair, And tall as flags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair, A match for pards in flight, in grappling for the bear. Dryden.

TO PARDON. v. a. [pardoner, French.] 1. To excuse an offender. When I beheld you in Cilicia, An enemy to Rome, I pardon'd you. Dryden.

2. To forgive a crime. That thou may'st see the difference of our spirit, I pardon thee thy life before thou ask it. Shakespeare's Lear.

3. To remit a penalty. Pardon me, is a word of civil denial, or slight apology. Sir, pardon me, it is a letter from my brother. Shakespeare.

PARDON. n. f. [Pardon, Fr. from the verb.] 1. Forgiveness of an offender.

2. Forgiveness of a crime; indulgence. He that pleases great men, shall get pardon for iniquity. Ecclus. xx. 27.

A slight pamphlet, about the elements of architecture, hath been entertained with some pardon among my friends. Wotton.

3. Remission of penalty. Forgiveness received. A man may be safe as to his condition, but, in the mean time, dark and doubtful as to his apprehensions; secure in his pardon, but miserable in the ignorance of it; and so passing all his days in the disconsolate, uneasy vicissitudes of hopes and fears, at length go out of the world, not knowing whither he goes. South's Sermons.

5. Warrant of forgiveness, or exemption from punishment. The battle done, and they within our power, Shall never see his pardon. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

PARDONABLE. adj. [prardonable, Fr. from pardon.] Venial; excusable. That which we do being evil, is notwithstanding by so much more pardonable, by how much the exigencies of so doing, or the difficulty of doing otherwise is greater, unless this necessity or difficulty have originally risen from ourselves. Hooker.

A blind man sitting in the chimney corner is pardonable enough, but sitting at the helm, he is intolerable. South.

What English readers, unacquainted with Greek or Latin, will believe me, when we confess we derive all that is pardonable in us from ancient fountains. Dryden.

PARDONABLENESS. n. f. [from pardonable.] Venialness; susceptibility of pardon. Saint John's word is, all sin is transgression of the law; Saint Paul's, the wages of sin is death: put these two together, and this conceit of the natural pardonableness of sin vanishes away. Hall.

PARDONABLY. adv. [from pardonable.] Venially; excusably. I may judge when I write more or less pardonably. Dryden.

PARDONER. n. f. [from pardon.] 1. One who forgives another. This is his pardon, purchas'd by such sin, For which the pardoner himself is in. Shakespeare.

2. Fellows that carried about the pope's indulgencies, and sold them to such as would buy them, against whom Luther incensed the people of Germany. Cowel.

TO PARE. v. a. [This word is reasonably deduced by Skinner from the French phrase, paret les ongles, to dress the horses' hoofs when they are shav'd by the farrier: thus we first said, pare our nails; and from thence transferred the word to general use.] To cut off extremities or the surface; to cut away by little and little; to diminish. The creed of Athanasius, and that sacred hymn of glory, than which nothing doth sound more heavenly in the ears of faithful men, are now reckoned as superfluities, which we must in any case pare away, lest we cloy God with too much service. Hooker.

I have not alone Employ'd you where high profits might come home; But par'd my present havings to bestow My bounties upon you. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

I am a man, whom fortune hath cruelly scratch'd. 'Tis too late to pare her nails now. Shakespeare.

The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure To have his princely paws all par'd away. Shakespeare.

The king began to pare a little the privilege of clergy, ordaining that clerks convicted, should be banish'd in the hand. Bacon's Henry VII.

Pick out of tales the mirth, but not the sin. He pares his apple, that will cleanly feed. Horbert.

Whoever will partake of God's secrets, must first look into his own, he must pare off whatsoever is amiss, and not without holiness approach to the holiest of all holies. Taylor.

All the mountains were par'd off the earth, and the surface of it lay even, or in an equal convexity every where with the surface of the sea. Burnet.

The most poetical parts, which are description and images, were to be par'd away, when the body was swollen into too large a bulk for the representation of the stage. Dryden.

The sword, as it was justly drawn by us, so can it scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be so far par'd and reduced, as that we may be under no apprehensions. Asterbury.

'Twere well if she would pare her nails. PAREGORICK. adj. [παρεγορικός.] Having the power in medicine to comfort, mollify and allunge. Ditt.

PARENCHYMA. n. f. [παρά and χυμα.] A spongy or porous substance; in physick, a part through which the blood is strained for its better fermentation and perfection. Ditt.

PARENCHYMATOUS. adj. [from parenchyma.] Relating to PARENCHYMOUS. } the parenchyma; spongy. Ten thousand seeds of the plant, hart's-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper corn. Now the covers and true body of each seed, the parenchymatous and ligneous parts of both moderately multiplied, afford an hundred thousand millions of formed atoms in the space of a pepper corn. Grew.

 PARENESIS. n. f. [παρὰνέσις,] Persuasion. Diogenes.
 PARENT. n. f. [parent, Fr. parents, Latin.] A father or mother.
 All true virtues are to honour true religion as their parent, and all well-ordered commonweales to love her as their chiefest stay. Hooker.
 As a publick parent of the state,
 My justice, and thy crime, requires thy fate. Dryden.
 In vain on the dissembl'd mother's tongue
 Had cunning art, and fly persuasion hung;
 And real care in vain and native love
 In the true parent's panting breast had strove. Prior.
 PARENTAGE. n. f. [parentage, Fr. from parent.] Extraction; birth; condition with respect to the rank of parents.
 A gentleman of noble parentage,
 Of fair demasns, youthful and nobly allied. Shakespeare.
 Though men esteem the low of parentage,
 Thy father is th' eternal king. Mil. Par. Reg.
 To his love go,
 And from himself your parentage may know. Dryden.
 We find him, not only boasting of his parentage, as an Israelite at large, but particularizing his descent from Benjamin. Atterbury's Sermons.
 PARENTAL. adj. [from parent.] Becoming parents; pertaining to parents.
 It overthrows the careful course and parental provision of nature, whereby the young ones newly excluded, are sustained by the dam. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 These eggs hatched by the warmth of the sun into little worms, feed without any need of parental care. Dryden.
 Young ladies, on whom parental controul sits heavily, give a man of intrigue room to think, that they want to be parents. Clarissa.
 PARENTATION. n. f. [from parents, Latin.] Something done or said in honour of the dead.
 PARENTHESIS. n. f. [parenthesis, Fr. παρεῖσις, and τίσις.] A sentence or included in another sentence, as that which incloses it: being commonly marked thus, ().
 In vain is my person excepted by a parenthesis of words, when so many hands are armed against me with swords. King Charles.
 In his Indian relations, are contained strange and incredible accounts; he is seldom mentioned, without a derogatory parenthesis in any author. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 'Thou shalt be seen,
 'Tho' with some short parenthesis between,
 High on the throne of wit. Dryden.
 Don't suffer every occasional thought to carry you away into a long parenthesis, and thus stretch out your discourse, and divert you from the point in hand. Watt's Logic.
 PARENTHETICAL. adj. [from parenthesis.] Pertaining to a parenthesis.
 PAPER. n. f. [from pare.] An instrument to cut away the surface.
 A hone and a paper, like sole of a boot,
 To pare away gralle, and to raise up the root. Tupper.
 PAPERGY. n. f. [παρὰνέσις and ἐργον.] Something unimportant; something done by the by.
 The scripture being serious, and commonly omitting such paperies, it will be unreasonable to condemn all laughter. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 PARGET. n. f. Plaster laid upon roofs of rooms.
 Gold was the parget, and the ceiling bright
 Did shine all scaly with great plates of gold;
 The floor with jasp and emerald was dight. Spenser.
 Of English tale, the coarser sort is called plaster or parget; the finer, spand.
 TO PARGET. v. a. [from the noun.] To plaster; to cover with plaster.
 There are not more arts of disguising our corporeal blemishes than our moral; and yet, whilst we thus paint and parget our own deformities, we cannot allow any the least imperfection of another's to remain undetected. Government of the Tongue.
 PARGETER. n. f. [from parget.] A plasterer.
 PARELION. n. f. [παρὰνέσις and ῥιόν.] A mock sun.
 To neglect that supreme resplendency, that shines in God, for those dim representations of it, that we so doat on in the creature, is as absurd, as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parelion, instead of adoring the sun. Boyle.
 PARIETAL. adj. [from paries, Latin.] Constituting the sides or walls.
 The lower part of the parietal and upper part of the temporal bones were fractured. Sharp's Surgery.
 PARIETARY. n. f. [parietaire, Fr. paries, Lat.] An herb. Anst.
 PARIING. n. f. [from pare.] That which is pared off any thing; the rind.

PAR

To his guest, tho' no way sparing,
 He eat himself the rind and paring. Pope.
 In May, after rain, pare off the surface of the earth, and with the parings raise your hills high, and enlarge their breadth. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 PARIS. n. f. An herb.
 PARISH. n. f. [parochia, low Lat. parroisse, Fr. of the Greek παροικία, i. e. accolatum conventus, acclatus, para vicinia.] The particular charge of a secular priest. Every church is either cathedral, conventual, or parochial: cathedral is that, where there is a bishop seated, so called a cathedra; conventual consists of regular clerks, professing some order of religion, or of a dean and chapter, or other college of spiritual men; parochial is that which is instituted for saying divine service, and administering the holy sacraments to the people, dwelling within a certain compass of ground near unto it. Our realm was first divided into parishes by Honorius, archbishop of Canterbury, in the year of our Lord 636.
 Dametas came piping and dancing, the merriest man in a parish. Sidney.
 The tythes, his parish freely paid, he took;
 But never f'd, or curs'd with bell or book. Dryden.
 PARISH. adj.
 1. Belonging to the parish; having the care of the parish.
 A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,
 An awful, reverend and religious man. Dryden.
 Not parish clerk, who calls the palm so clear. Gay.
 The office of the church is performed by the parish priest, at the time of his interment. Shakespeare.
 A man, after his natural death, was not capable of the least parish office. Atterbury's Sermons.
 2. Maintained by the parish.
 The poet and the parish girl are entire new characters. Gay.
 PARISHIONER. n. f. [parroissien, Fr. from parish.] One that belongs to the parish.
 I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutor'd by you. Shakespeare.
 Hail bishop Valentine, whose day this is,
 All the air is thy diocese;
 And all the chirping choristers,
 And other birds are thy parishioners. Dome.
 In the greater out-parishes, many of the parishioners, tho' neglect, do perish. Grant.
 I have deposited thirty marks, to be distributed among the poor parishioners. Addison's Spectator.
 PARITOR. n. f. [for apparitor.] A beadle; a summoner of the courts of civil law.
 You shall be summon'd by an host of paritors; you shall be sentenced in the spiritual court. Dryden.
 PARITY. n. f. [parité, Fr. paritas, Lat.] Equality; resemblance.
 We may here justly tax the dishonesty and shamefulness of the mouths, who have upbraided us with the opinion of a certain stoical parity of sins. Hall.
 That Christ or his apostles ever commanded to set up such a parity of presbyters, and in such a way as those Scots endeavoured, I think is not very disputable. K. Charles.
 Survey the total set of animals, and we may, in their legs or organs of progression, observe an equality of length and parity of numeration; that is, not any to have an odd leg, or the movers of one side not exactly answered by the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Those accidental occurrences, which excited Socrates to the discovery of such an invention, might fall in with that man that is of a perfect parity with Socrates. Hale.
 Their agreement, in essential characters, makes rather an identity than a parity. Glavinille.
 Women could not live in that parity and equality of experience with their husbands, as now they do. Grant.
 By an exact parity of reason, we may argue, if a man has no sense of those kindnesses that pass upon him, from one like himself, whom he fees and knows, how much less shall his heart be affected with the grateful sense of his favours, whom he converses with only by imperfect speculations, by the discourses of reason, or the discoveries of faith. Swift's Sermons.
 By parity of reason, we must expect a peace to much worse about two years hence. Swift's Miscellaneous.
 PARK. n. f. [parcus, Sax. para, Fr.] A piece of ground inclosed and fenced with wild beasts of chase, which a man may have by prescription or the king's grant. Manwood, in his forest-laws, defines it thus: a park is a place for privilege for wild beasts of venery, and also for other wild beasts, that are beasts of the forest and of the chase: and those wild beasts are to have a firm peace and protection there, so that no man may hurt or chase them within the park, without license of the owner: a park is of another nature, than either a chase or a warren; for a park must be inclosed, and may not lie open; if it does, it is a good cause of seizure into the king's hands: and the owner cannot have action against such as hunt in his park, if it lies open. Grant.
 We have parks and inclosures of all sorts of beasts and birds, which we use not only for view or rareness, but likewise for dissections and trials. Bacon.
 To PARK.

PAR

TO PARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose as in a park.
 How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?
 A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
 Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakespeare.
 PARKER. n. f. [from park.] A park-keeper. Anst.
 PARKLEAVES. n. f. An herb. Anst.
 PARLE. n. f. [from parler, French.] Conversation; talk; oral treaty; oral discussion of any thing.
 Of all the gentlemen,
 That every day with parle encounter me,
 In thy opinion, which is worthiest love. Shakespeare.
 Our trumpet call'd you to this general parle. Shakespeare.
 The bishop, by a parle, is, with a show
 Of combination, cunningly betray'd. Daniel.
 Why meet we thus like wrangling advocates,
 To urge the justice of our cause with words?
 I hate this parle; 'tis tame: if we must meet,
 Give me my arms. Race's Ambitious Step-mother.
 TO PARLEY. v. n. [from parler, French.] To treat by word of mouth; to talk; to discuss any thing orally. It is much used in war, for a meeting of enemies to talk.
 A Turk desired the captain to send some, with whom they might more conveniently parley. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
 He parleys with her a while, as imagining she would advise him to proceed. Brome.
 PARLEY. n. f. [from the verb.] Oral treaty; talk; conference; discussion by word of mouth.
 Seek rather by parley, to recover them than by the sword. Sidney.
 Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley:
 A rotten case abides no handling. Shakespeare.
 In such a parley should I answer thee. Shakespeare.
 Summon a parley, we will talk with him. Shakespeare.
 Let us resolve never to have any parley with our lulls, but to make some considerable progress in our repentance. Calamy.
 No gentle means could be effay'd;
 'Twas beyond parley when the siege was laid. Dryden.
 Force, never yet a generous heart did gain;
 We yield on parley, but are scorn'd in vain. Dryden.
 Yet when some better fated youth
 Shall with his am'rous parley move thee,
 Reflect one moment on his truth,
 Who dying thus, persists to love thee. Prior.
 PARLIAMENT. n. f. [parliamentum, low Lat. parlement, Fr.] In England, is the assembly of the king and three estates of the realm; namely, the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and commons, for the debating of matters touching the common wealth, especially the making and correcting of laws; which assembly or court is, of all others, the highest, and of greatest authority. Cowell.
 The king is tied to London,
 To call a present court of parliament. Shakespeare.
 Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,
 To make a shamble of the parliament house.
 The true use of parliaments is very excellent; and be often called, and continued as long as is necessary.
 I thought the right way of parliaments, the most safe for my crown, as best pleasing to my people. King Charles.
 These are mob readers: if Virgil and Martial stood for parliament-men, we know who would carry it. Dryden.
 PARLIAMENTARY. adj. [from parliament.] Enacted by parliament; relating to parliament.
 To the three first titles of the two houses, or lines, and conquest, were added two more; the authorities parliamentary and parol. Bacon.
 Many things, that obtain as common law, had their original by parliamentary acts or constitutions, made in writings by the king, lords, and commons.
 Credit to run ten millions in debt, without parliamentary security; I think to be dangerous and illegal. Hale.
 PARLOUR. n. f. [parloir, French; parlatorio, Italian.]
 1. A room in monasteries, where the religious meet and converse.
 2. A room in houses on the first floor, elegantly furnished for reception or entertainment.
 Can we judge it a thing seemly, for a man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use. Hooker.
 Back again fair Alma led them right,
 And soon into a goodly parlour brought. Fa. Queen.
 It would be infinitely more shameful, in the drefs of the kitchen, to receive the entertainments of the parlour. Saunders.
 Roof and sides were like a parlour made,
 A soft recess, and a cool summer shade. Dryden.
 PARLOUS. adj. [This might seem to come from parler, Fr. to speak; but Junius derives it, I think, rightly, from perileus, in which sense it answers to the Latin improbus.] Keen; sprightly; waggish.
 Midas durst communicate
 To none but to his wife his ears of state;
 One must be trusted, and he thought her fit,
 As passing prudent, and a parlous wit. Dryden.
 PARLOUSNESS. n. f. [from parlous.] Quickness; keenness of temper.

PAR

PARMA-CITTY. n. f. Corruptedly for sperma ceti. Anst.
